The King Celebrates Generous Mr. Jameson Pagodas Shaken Protection Overdone

—By Arthur Brisbane—

CELEBRATING yesterday his 20th anniversary as King of England and Emperor of India, King George went to the races for the first time since his serious illness.

Buckingham Palace and the government buildings were decorated with flags. His subjects rejoiced.

He has been a good king, aware that the business of a British ruler is to listen to his ministers chosen by the people and say "amen" when they have spoken.

Looking back over 20 years, King George must feel grateful for the firmness of his throne, one of few, involved in the World War, that survived it.

If he looks ahead India probably worries him.

In the reign of Queen Victoria, a keen man whose ancestors came from Asia, Disraeli, made the Queen of those foggy Western Islands Empress of India.

It would be interesting if a shrunken, half-starved ascetic Hindu, sitting in a British prison in India should take the imperial crown from the head of King George.

Gandhi, comfortable in his British jail, sends polite thanks for the kind treatment. Meanwhile his followers, freed from his gentle advice and remarkable control, worry the British. The army is in control of India. European civilians carry weapons to protect themselves. 300,000,000 Asiatics, even water-drinking, vegetarian, naturally peaceful Asiatics, would not be easily controlled with patriotic excitement moving them.

E. C. Jameson, New York financier, tells the Senate he contributed $93,000 to help beat Alfred E. Smith in Virginia.

Sixty-five thousand, three hundred dollars of the money he sent to be spent by Bishop James Cannon, who undoubtedly dispersed the funds in accordance with highest political ethics.

Mr. Jameson spent nearly $200,000, altogether, in his fight against Smith, who, nevertheless, got 15,000,000 votes, 7,000,000 more than any other Democrat ever got.

The "Old Moulmein pagoda, looking eastward to the sea," may be lying flat on the ground today.

A big earthquake killed more than 5000 in Rangoon, shaking and shattering other towns, flames sweeping the streets, populace panic stricken, many dead.

It is all far away, to us over here.

If it were not for Kipling's poem, comparatively few would know anything about Burma, "across the bay" from China.

This country's workers and industrialists need protection, and should have it.

Our people come first, other people second.

But intelligence should control even the tariff. It is possible to overdo the business of discouraging friendly nations with whom we deal.

President Muay, of the Swiss republic, wires President Hoover: "I am compelled to call attention to the fact that your watch and lace duties will, eventually, paralyze our national industries."

That suggestion means little to us. But we should take seriously the danger of hopelessly discouraging Swiss industries, offending and injuring the good people of Switzerland.

Wall Street went to work more carefully yesterday.

Too young to have enjoyed the personal acquaintance of Sisyphus, you can't know how those Wall Street speculators patiently push prices up, after they roll down.

It is a sight, as sad as when you destroy an ant's nest and see little ants dragging out baby ants, or rebuilding the little mountain, bringing back the grains of sand.

This latest price calamity, you are told, was "a big man's sorrow." Rich men were pinched, not little ones. They decided that the time had come to buy stocks and let the little men hold them up. Something went wrong.

In New York, on the other ocean, the thermometer stands at 80, and rising, as this is written.

Some, unfortunately, are believed to be incendiary.

Why any man, whatever his grievance against an individual, society as a whole or himself, should set fire to a countryside and burn beautiful trees that could not offend him, is beyond comprehension.

Prisoners Imperilled in Firetrap

PRISON PERIL REVEALED IN AMERICAN SURVEY

Charlestown Jail Condemned 54 Years Ago; Move on for New Penitentiary

The Massachusetts State prison at Charlestown, now more than 125 years old, should be abandoned at once.

The overcrowded, dangerous and antiquated fire-trap has been the subject of agitation in the Legislature since 1874.

Always political expediency or procrastination has headed off any definite action to eliminate the disgrace to the State.

Today, however, the horror of the recent disaster in the Columbus, O., penitentiary has brought home the possibility of a like holocaust here. If such a thing should happen the Legislature would have a difficult time dodging the responsibility.

Every public official knows and admits that the old prison is not only a disgrace to the State, but that it is an ever-present menace to the nearly 1000 inmates herded into the unsanitary, dark and noisome cells.

4 FLEE FIRE IN DORCHESTER

A mother and three children fled to safety today when fire raced through the two-story wooden building at 10 Rawson st., Dorchester, causing damage estimated at $10,000.

Mrs. George Cushman, preparing a noon meal, seeing the flames that apparently had started in the rear of a first-floor junk shop, led the children out of their home.

On the rapid transit line outside Andrew sq., trains had to run through a blanket of sparks and smoke when the grass blazed along the tracks.

District Chief Michael Teehan ordered a second alarm on account of the closeness of buildings. Three horsemen of Engine 21 were forced away from a door when a hot-air explosion occurred.

For the second day running the heat record was broken when the mercury climbed to the 92 mark at 1:15 p. m. today, three degrees over the previous record for the day made in 1916.

The rise sent crowds scurrying to beaches and other open resorts to seek relief from the swelter of the city.

The Brookline schools were closed on order of Supt. Oscar C. Gallagher when the mercury reached the 90 mark.

Slight relief tonight and light showers tomorrow were the best hope the weather man could give for a change.

At noon the mercury reached the mark of 88 degrees—2 degrees higher than yesterday at the same time.

NAMED FOR 5 YEARS 'WITH NO STRINGS ON JOB'

Plans to Rehabilitate Force; Appointment of Veteran Official Pleases Curley

Eugene C. Hultman is Boston's new police commissioner.

Governor Allen nominated the building commissioner and former fire commissioner for the post at noon and unanimous confirmation was given immediately by the governor's council.

The appointment was for five years.

"I am going to rehabilitate the department, the new commissioner announced after being sworn in by the governor himself.

"There are no strings attached to the appointment," said Governor Allen.

In the light of these statements and considering Hultman's past career during which he "shook up" the fire department and as chairman of the commission on the necessaries of life was an independent foetus in the side of profiteers, complete re-organization of the police force may be expected.

"FORCE NEEDS IT"

He admitted that Atty.-Gen. Warner's report on the Garrett case, which caused the removal of his predecessor, Herbert A. Wilson, indicated that the police department needed a thorough cleaning but said he would not act until he had studied conditions.

"I'm going to rehabilitate the department so that it can perform good service for the public," announced the new commissioner.

"Will you abolish the headquarters liquor squad?" he was asked. He replied:

"I have always found it a good rule not to talk too darn much before doing anything. I have got to investigate before I can tell what I will do. I will do whatever is necessary."

Governor Allen interrupted:

"You can say, commissioner, that there isn't a single string goes with this position."

SACRIFICE TO HIM

Hultman insisted upon being appointed for the full five-year term instead of for the two years of Wilson's unexpired term, it is understood. He does not feel that the $8000 salary is high enough for the job. Whether he was unofficially assured that a higher salary for commissioner would be one of the legislative outcomes of the Garrett case was not known.

"I am taking this position at a sacrifice to myself," he said. "As I understand it, the law specifically says the commissioner can engage in the pursuit of no other business. As building commissioner it was possible for me to continue my work as engineer."

Of his appointee, Gov. Allen said:

EUCHARISTIC CONGRESS OPEN

Carthage, Tunisia, May 7 (AP)—A brilliant pageant began today to unfold itself in this ancient city as 16,000 pilgrims to the Roman Catholic Eucharistic Congress gathered for their five days' religious ceremonies.

A first glimpse of the splendor of the occasion was had this morning when Cardinal Lepicier, Papal delegate, with a retinue of high ecclesiastical attendants, went to pay his respects to the Bey of Tunis.

Eleven more great ships today arrived at Tunis, bearing their quotas of pilgrims. Among them was the Aragusya with a large party of Americans, including New Englanders.

When these delegates, among the last to come, had completed their journey, the scene was prepared for the formal opening of the world-wide congress at which Cardinal Lepicier will read the papal bull.

Twenty-seven centuries of history looked down upon the vast assemblage which thronged this little village, once the greatest city in the world. Here were gathered for a stay of five days many of Christendom's most learned minds, and Carthage became again a seat of intellectual progress.

HULTMAN TO START POLICE JOB BY CLEANING UP DEPARTMENT

NAMED FOR 5 YEARS' TERM BY ALLEN

Appointment Wins Favor of Mayor Curley; New Commissioner Experienced Leader

"Judging by his past service, I believe Mr. Hultman will render an excellent account of himself in his new post. I believe he will prove to be the right man in the right place."

The governor and the new commissioner left the State House after induction to lunch at the Chamber of Commerce. Commissioner Hultman was to assume his new duties immediately and was expected at police headquarters before evening.

"I guess I'll have to go up and tell them I'm their new boss," he declared.

IT PLEASES CURLEY

Mayor Curley, who made Hultman building commissioner after accepting his resignation as fire commissioner, is particularly pleased with the appointment and issued a statement revealing that Hultman consulted him regarding it early today.

"Mr. Hultman conferred with me this morning in my office and informed me that the position of police commissioner had been tendered to him," said the Mayor.

"There was a question in his mind with reference to an increase in salary. Mr. Hultman believed it should be greater than it is. I agreed with him.

"He also thought the appointment should be for the full five-year term instead of for the remainder of the unexpired term, and I agreed with that also. At the close of our talk I was inclined to believe he would accept.

"Mr. Hultman has been associated for 25 years with the offices of both state and city and his experience as chairman of the commission of the unexpired term of life as well as his experience as fire commissioner and building commissioner and as a member of the state Legislature should imminently qualify him for the handling of even what the discharge of duties as police commissioner."

IS TECH GRADUATE

As building commissioner, Hultman received an annual salary of $7500.

Until his appointment by Mayor Nichols as fire commissioner in June, 1926, Hultman was a resident of Quincy. He moved immediately to a house in Beacon st., Back Bay, where he now resides.

He is 53 years old. He was graduated from the Massachusetts Institute of Technology in 1896 as a civil engineer and did work in the line of his profession for street railways. He was vice-president of the West End Street Railway at the time it was absorbed by the Boston Elevated.

He served as State representative and senator from the Quincy district. In 1920 he was appointed emergency fuel administrator for Massachusetts and later in the same year was named chairman of the commission on necessaries of life.

In these posts, during the post-war period of reconstruction and rehabilitation, he ruled coal profiteers with an iron hand and is generally credited with having introduced the general use of bituminous coal in the State, thus giving anthracite operators who sought to capitalize the hard coal shortage by jacking up prices to tremendous figures.

FOUGHT RENT HOGS

His later work against "rent hogs" and profiteers in other necessities earned him the reputation of independence and he was for a long period a storm center in Massachusetts political circles, his chairmanship of the commission being attacked. Many futile efforts were made to have him removed from the post.

If Hultman accepted the police commissionership after it had been declined by Andrew Marshall, it is not the first time that he elected to fill a vacancy ignored by others.

In 1926 the Boston fire commissionership was going begging and Nichols was reported to have offered it to six others before he turned to Hultman.

The state office-holder took the city job and had been in it but a short time before he shook it up, gradually but thoroughly, nevertheless. He reorganized the discipline of the department to a considerable degree, announcing that he would conduct his office in his own manner when members of the department sought to interfere.

As fire commissioner he completed motorization of the Boston department, reorganized and rebuilt most of its houses. He changed the alarm "rover in" system so that even after five alarms there was plenty of apparatus to respond to another fire. One of his orders was to supply firemen with a hand light.

He also ordered the fire apparatus drivers to cut down on their speed and this materially reduced the number of accidents in which apparatus figured.

When Mayor Curley assumed office it was reported that Hultman was viewed with considerable favor and although he was permitted to resign he was immediately appointed building commissioner.

Hultman is a Republican and a former secretary of the Republican Club of Massachusetts.

ADMIRAL THERE

Hultman was not present when his name was sent into the council but he appeared after confirmation. While the council was gathering Rear Admiral Philip Andrews was in the governor's office and his presence gave rise to the report that he was to be the new commissioner.

Governor Allen admitted that he had talked with Admiral Andrews regarding the commissionership.

"But not in the way you think," he told newspapermen.

Hollywood, Cal., May 7 (AP)—Dedicated by Dolores Del Rio, Spanish actress, before a curious group of 200 persons, a bronze statue in memory of Rudolph Valentino, once known as the most popular moving picture actor, today stood in De Longpre Park.

Dolores Del Rio

Not a Hollywood picture star of the days of Valentino attended the service. The statue, called "Aspiration," is the work of Roger Noble Burnham, once of Boston, now of Hollywood.

Peculiarly, the art work, paid for by the late actor's admirers, was grudgingly given a place in the park by the city commissioners. They contended Hollywood couldn't be cluttered up with bronze memories of picture luminaries.

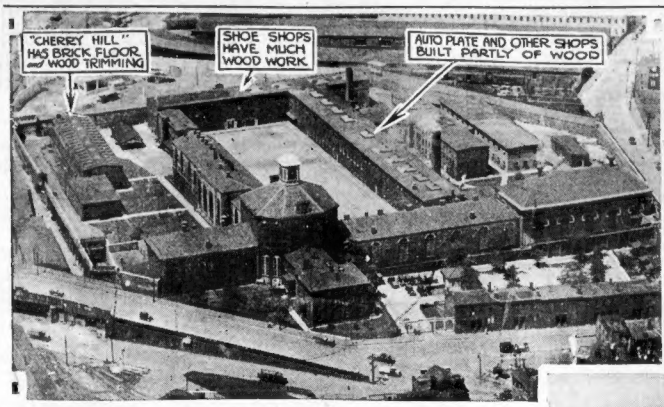
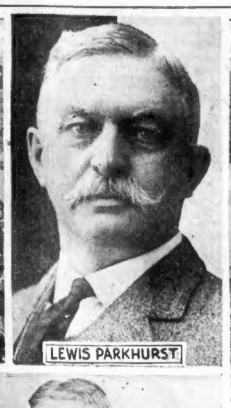
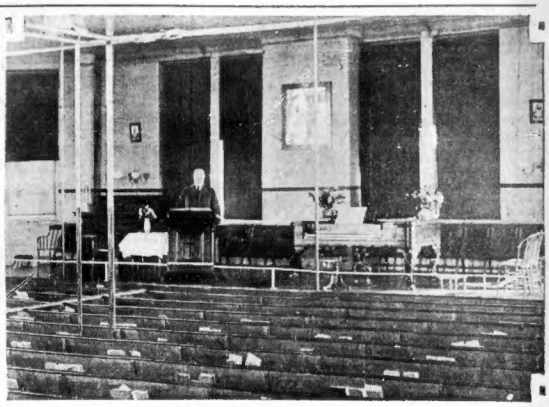
GRAVE PERIL TO LIVES OF CONVICTS IN CHARLESTOWN BARED



An aerial view of the Charlestown State prison, oft condemned as a fire trap but still permitted to house society's outcasts. This 125-year-old prison, it is charged, lacks sprinkling equipment, especially in the workshops, and would be quickly demolished if fire got under way. The possibilities of a holocaust, comparable to the one that visited the Columbus, Ohio, prison recently, exist here. Railroad yards that surround the prison and woodwork in the makeup of the prison structures, create a hazardous situation.





Here is the chapel at the Charlestown prison, which former Mayor John F. Fitzgerald chose to call "A VERITABLE FIRE TRAP." In speaking of the chapel and conditions at Charlestown prison, the former mayor said: "This appalling neglect of a perilous situation may some day cause the people of Boston to stand aghast with horror." The sprinkler system in the chapel is held to be inadequate. In speaking of the prison long ago, Bishop Lawrence cried from his pulpit, "When will that dungeon, the State prison, be razed?"

Obsolete Prison, Easy Prey of Fire, Potential Scene of New Holocaust

Demand for New Structure Grows as Peril to Convicts Is Bared

and demands from officials and citizens alike that the old structure should be razed. By so doing, the State would save at least $50,000 a year, experts assert, and money obtained from the sale of the site could be used in the construction of modern, fireproof prison camps.

The prison has been condemned by various official investigators. As long ago as 1876 it was abandoned and for six years was used as a warehouse. The year 1930 in enlightened Massachusetts finds it doing service as a prison!

Massachusetts has been too smugly satisfied with a few of the facts regarding its State prison and has failed to face the whole truth.

THREAT OF TRAGEDY

Behind the brick and stone wall at Charlestown there exists, it appears, a potential "Columbus horror"—the threat of a tragedy as great as that in which the lives of 322 men were sacrificed on the altar of political expediency in Ohio.

There is an ominous fire hazard at the Massachusetts prison and there is a greater hazard, it is pointed out, from smoke in the fireproof cell tiers. A large percentage of the Columbus unfortunates were victims of suffocation; fire never reached them.

The prison was branded as obsolete, inadequate, easy of escape and a fire hazard today by former State Senator Lewis Parkhurst, of Winchester, who is Governor Allen's appointee as the state's delegate to the International Prison Congress, which will be held in Prague, Czecho Slovakia, August 25-30.

Parkhurst knows whereof he speaks. He has been interested for years in improving Massachusetts' prison system. Recently he returned from Hawaii, where he made a study of penal institutions.

CONDITIONS WORSE

Off and on, since 1874, there has been legislation for a new State prison. Delay has always triumphed over humanitarianism.

The prison colony at Norfolk was established by appropriation in the State budgets of 1926 and 1927 and it was said then that the State prison would be moved from Charlestown to Norfolk, and the old Charlestown "Bastile" razed.

The Charlestown prison today houses as many or more prisoners than it ever did, under conditions that have grown steadily worse with the years. Slow progress is being made at Norfolk, where prisoners are doing all the work.

Meanwhile, it is pointed out, the number of convicts in Massachusetts is increasing daily, and there is small prospect of the Norfolk colony being established as the State prison unless a definite program of construction there and abandonment at Charlestown is immediately drafted.

Making plain the immediate need of new facilities, former Senator Parkhurst said today:

"In 1874, after two years of agitation and discussion, the Legislature authorized the governor to appoint a commission to build a new State prison. It was never erected.

"In 1878, by an act of the Legislature, the prisoners were transferred to Concord, where they remained six years, during which period the old prison in Charlestown was used for storage purposes.

"It was condemned by the commissioner of correction in his report of 1920, by the commission of State administration and expenditures (the Webster committee) in its report of 1931 and by W. Cameron Forbes in 1925.

"Bishop Lawrence long ago cried from the pulpit, 'When will that dungeon, fit only for the Middle Ages, the State prison, be razed?'"

Parkhurst made a personal inspection of the Charlestown prison after reading the report of the commissioner of correction describing it as inadequate, out-of-date, hard to keep clean and lacking hospital facilities. He was amazed that such conditions as he found would be allowed to exist.

He learned that only a part of the 11 acres owned by the state in Charlestown is surrounded by a wall and so available for prison purposes.

He found the prison surrounded by railroad yards and busy thoroughfares. Smoking engines and factories make it a difficult place to keep clean and if a prisoner once gets outside the wall, his escape is almost a certainty.

All these conditions, he believes, would be improved immeasurably if the prison were located in the country.

ESCAPE EASY

He found the wall itself entirely inadequate.

The buildings are near it, and in some instances touch it.

At certain places it is impossible for a guard on the wall to get a view of what is going on inside.

It necessitates five guards on duty constantly.

For business reasons alone, Massachusetts should abandon the State Prison, Parkhurst pointed out.

"I am confident that a checkup would show that the State has lost at least $50,000 every year for the past 17 years holding on to the State Prison and will continue to lose a like amount annually just so long as the place is maintained," he said

Parkhurst declared that in 1873 the Eastern Railroad, purchasing some of the land of the Commonwealth, contracted to take all of the Charlestown property if the State wished to give it up at a price to be determined by three commissioners appointed by the Supreme Court.

This agreement was binding upon the railroad and its assigns. Its assigns are the Boston & Maine railroad, Parkhurst points out, and they are bound to buy the property if the State will sell.

TELLS OF MENACE

The money thus available could be used in construction of the new State Prison, either at Norfolk or elsewhere, he suggests.

On April 3, William B. Cox, secretary of the National Society of Penal Information at New York, declared that conditions similar to those which caused the Ohio penitentiary horror could be found in the Massachusetts State Prison.

Even while Cox was voicing his charges, fire officials of the city were making an inspection of the prison. District Chief Thomas F. Ward submitted a report from which the following are excerpts:

"The school room is at present being used as a dormitory. This room has wooden floor with metal ceiling over lath and plaster and has old type electric wiring. Thirty men sleep in the room, beds about one foot apart.

"Each cell has a separate lock and all cells are on a lever which opens all cells at one time BUT THE LEVER CANNOT BE USED UNTIL EACH DOOR HAS BEEN UNLOCKED, SO THAT IN CASE OF FIRE, WHEN INMATES ARE IN CELLS, EACH DOOR MUST BE SEPARATELY UNLOCKED BEFORE THEY CAN BE LIBERATED.

"The fire hazards in all the workshops are many, due to second class construction of the buildings, wooden floors, long wooden work benches with wooden drawers containing inflammable material . . . a hazard in old style electric wiring . . . The workshop buildings have been built for many years.

The report found the cells themselves to be practically fire proof and the hazard from fire to be small. Recommendations were made for sprinkler systems, new wiring, etc., and it was announced that these recommendations would be put into actual effect at a cost of between $25,000 and $50,000.

On March 25, 1922, the laundry at State prison was destroyed by fire while 900 convicts were in their cells. In its story of that fire a Boston morning paper said:

"The entire prison was filled with choking smoke . . . prisoners shouted for their release as they choked . . ."

There was no loss of life; the Boston fire department extinguished the fire. But the threat then glimpsed—and promptly forgotten—is ever present.

Fire is not the only threat at Charlestown. Revolt threatened in 1925, revolt threatened there last year. Men housed inadequately under conditions said to breed criminality—overcrowded, sleeping 30 to a small room, "in beds about one foot apart," are treated no better than animals, and cannot be expected to act differently, it is argued.

Parkhurst's opinions are like those of many influential men who feel that Massachusetts' State prison should be "junked" immediately for a modern, sanitary, wholly fireproof structure in which men who have erred will have an opportunity for redemption and not be subjected to constant danger and a self-breeding bitterness that is one of the greatest menaces to society.

Former Mayor John F. Fitzgerald of Boston, is another who took a fling at the State Prison at Charlestown and characterized it a "fire trap."

"There is an apparent indifference of State authorities to conditions in State institutions," he said. "There is the need of a great holocaust, comparable to the appalling loss of life in the Ohio State penetentiary, lurking in the chapel in the State Prison at Charlestown where men congregate to worship on Sundays.

"An appalling neglect of a perilous situation may some day cause the people of Boston to stand aghast with horror.

"The State Prison at Charlestown is a relic of the dark ages.

"I complained sometime ago of the utter lack of sprinklers in the workshops at the Charlestown prison. These shops would be quick prey to flames once they got the upper hand."

How Mass. Prisoners Are Packed Into Dark, Unsanitary Cells in Pen

Prisoners in the Massachusetts penitentiary in Charlestown are housed in cubical boxes, granite top, bottom and sides, arranged in four tiers, one above the other.

In the front of each is a door, of which part is grated. There are no other means of ventilation. It is through this grate the prisoner gets all his light and air.

If he is fortunate enough to be opposite a window in the outside wall of the prison, 15 or 20 feet away, he can see the sunlight at some time in the day.

There are no toilet facilities.

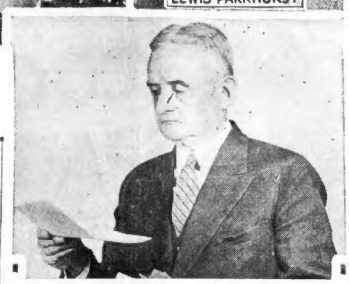
In such a room the prisoner spends all his time that he is not at work in the shop or exercising in the yard—probably 16 hours out of the 24 in this dark, unsanitary hole.

The prisoner passes a hole in the wall in the kitchen three times a day, receives his ration and returns to his cell for his meals.

If he is sick he has no decent hospital to go to, but is moved into a sort of wide corridor, adjacent to his cell, where he can have a little more light and air.

If he has to be operated on, his cot is shoved up against a grated window in the wall, and the surgeon does the best he can under the circumstances in which he finds himself.

Many of the conditions, which continue to put the brand of the prison on the inmates, are undoubtedly due to the survival of the Bastile type of prison architecture, which is so well exemplified at Charlestown. No reforming influence, however humane and generous, would long survive in the atmosphere of such a place.



Two voices were lifted today in hopes of awakening authorities to action that will spare Boston from a prison holocaust such as Columbus, Ohio, suffered. The men who spoke out are former Senator Lewis Parkhurst of Winchester and former Mayor John F. Fitzgerald.

HEALY BRANDS PRISON 'DEVIL WORKSHOP'

Washington, May 7- (INS)—Lawmaking by Congress is but a vain gesture in America's effort to reduce crime, William A. Healy of Boston, one of the three psychiatrists that defended Nathan Leopold and Richard Loeb in their famous murder trial, told International News Service today.

He condemned the American penal system as an utter failure. Congress, he said, has gone on enacting new laws for years, building up legal barriers that are but invitations for the mentally sick to crash through.

He suggested colonization of criminals under comprehensive supervision and observation to eradicate crime.

Prisons, he said, are "the devil's workshops," because men kept there idle must think, and their thoughts are far from reconstructive with nothing but punishment to think about.

"In England," he said, "the follow up system is better than ours. But the early, social work among juveniles is not so good.

"Look at the improvement over the Victorian era, when immorality was rampant, but never mentioned in conversation. Youth of today is frank, but the mind is basically more healthy than those of other times."

OHIO PRISON HEAD DEFIES OUSTERS

Columbus, Ohio, May 7 (US)—Ostine heels of his reported statement that Governor Cooper's administration dare not oust him because he "has too much on them," Warden Preston E. Thomas today defied his accusers in the recent tragedy to attempt his removal.

As confident of his position as he was before the lives of the 322 convicts were snuffed out in locked cells by smoke and fire, Thomas directed his challenge principally to Atty-Gen. Gilbert Bettman.

This State official made the inquiry into the holocaust and laid the responsibility directly on the warden's shoulders.

"If Bettman runs for governor two years from now, I'll run against him," challenged Thomas, "and I'll beat him."

Puffing hard on a cigar while sitting in a swivel chair in the prison office with Ohio National Guardsmen patrolling inside and outside the institution's walls, Thomas went:

"Why, Bettman complains we had no system of fire drills here. Who ever heard of a fire drill in a penitentiary?"

He thought this good, for he raised his head, held the cigar at arms length and smiled.

"I am 100 per cent right in this thing," he continued. "I know I am right. I would do over again just what I did on the night of the fire.

"The governor knows what he is talking about. He said this thing was of incendiary origin. Do you know there was an explosion there that night that had not been brought out before.

"Those fellows inside there, (pointing to the cell houses) set the place on fire themselves," the 65-year-old head of the prison said. "That is all I am saying about the fire. I don't know what the State fire marshal is going to report, but wait until it comes."

A Balanced Meal in the Shortest Time!

IT seems impossible—doesn't it?—to actually prepare a complete, well balanced meal by just heating a can—a meal that is not only delicious, but contains all the vital elements needed by growing children as well as adults.

And yet it is being done every day in countless homes throughout America. Here's the secret. Serve Mueller's Cooked Spaghetti as the main dish. This body-building, energy-making, palate-teasing food comes to you already cooked and in a sauce of luscious, healthful ingredients—of tomatoes and other fresh vegetables and mellow, tasty cheese. It is prepared in sunlit kitchens, under the most modern, sanitary conditions.

Not only is Mueller's Cooked Spaghetti easy to serve; it is, in itself, a balanced meal, containing, in correct proportions, precious vitamins for health and growth—protein for body building—carbohydrates for energy—mineral salts for the blood, bone and teeth. Mueller's Cooked Spaghetti is made from a special blend of farina—the heart of the wheat—a cereal so easily digested that it is usually the first solid food given to infants.

Health, Energy and Tasty Appeal

Think of preparing, in so short a time, a meal that contains all the energizing elements of meat in a far more digestible form. The thick, delicious sauce derives its rich consistency entirely from the choice tomatoes and other fresh vegetables and the zesty, thoroughly aged cheese used in making it. No "filler" is added; no artificial coloring or preservative.

A Convincing Test

Just make this test today; get a can of Mueller's Cooked Spaghetti from your grocer. Place it in boiling water. While it is heating, set the table, cut the bread, put down the coffee and fix the dessert. Then open the can, pour its savory contents into a dish and call the family—the meal is ready.

And what a meal! You will receive many a hearty compliment when you serve it. You will have the satisfaction of knowing that you have served a healthful, satisfying, balanced meal to your family and you'll be fresh and ready to enjoy the evening.

It Stands Supreme

Keep half a dozen cans of Mueller's Cooked Spaghetti in your pantry at all times. You will find them most handy when unexpected guests arrive—when you come home tired after a day of shopping—when it's too hot to spend hours over a stove—for a tasty midnight supper—and on other occasions when you want to prepare a delicious, balanced meal at a moment's notice. Your first experience with this tasty, healthful food will quickly show you why it stands supreme.

Ask your grocer for Mueller's Cooked Spaghetti today. He has it or can get it for you.

BISHOP CANNON FACES CHARGE

Dallas, Tex., May 7 (AP)—A reported contemplated attack on Bishop James Cannon, Jr., of Virginia, lent an early controversial hue today to the opening of the quadrennial conference, Methodist Episcopal Church, South, here.

The charges, expected to be brought by a member of the Georgia delegation, will deal specifically with Cannon's participation in politics, according to general reports current among delegates.

The bishop has refused to discuss the charges, or to comment on the testimony given in Washington yesterday before the congressional lobby committee. E. C. Jemeson of New York, prominent in Republican affairs, testified as to an alleged discrepancy in a fund he gave Cannon for the fight against Alfred E. Smith in the last presidential race.

CAFE DRINKERS MUST TESTIFY

New York, May 7 (AP)—Two patrons of a restaurant were under subpoena today to tell a federal grand jury what they were drinking at the bar of the establishment when the subpoenas were served.

Federal prohibition agents, who said they had been unable to buy drinks in Shark's restaurant in Pearl st., visited the place, accompanied by two deputy United States marshals armed with blank subpoenas signed by United States Attorney Charles H. Tuttle.

The deputy marshals approached two patrons, asked them their names and after writing the names into the documents served them.

Robert E. Watts, assistant United States attorney in charge of prohibition enforcement, said that the patrons would have to testify to what they had been drinking or face possible jail sentences for contempt of court.

47 Per Cent Gain in Utilities Earnings

New York, May 7—Earnings of Middle West Utilities and subsidiaries for the first quarter of 1930 show an increase of 47 per cent in net (before retirement) available for preferred and common stock over the corresponding quarter of 1929.

This amount is $8,535,544, compared with $5,809,983 for 1929. The increase is due to greater gross earnings, improved operating efficiency and to the elimination of note interest and amortization of note interest as a result of the refinancing of the company last November.

Plymouth to Have Gala Program

Historic Town Will Play Big Part in Tercentenary of Massachusetts

TERCENTENARY DAYS are here and we cannot let the time go by without a few passing remarks about dear old Plymouth. Having led such a quiet life socially for a number of years, this historic town is coming to the fore a little, and it is about time. The demure and austere Pilgrims would hardly know their Plymouth if they could land at the fashionable Beach Club where the languid women are not allowed on the sands unless they henna their tootsies and appear in pajamas that an Oriental princess might envy.

WE HEAR THAT THE GOLF club is to be renovated and of course the yacht club has always drawn fashionable Cape Cod. Even Manomet Hills isn't going to escape the march of progress and gentlemen's estates will dot the hills behind the town. Personally, we thought that gentlemen's estates were already a drug on the market but as most of the masculine colony in this locality come straight from State st., there may be a reason. The money simply has to go somewhere.

ALREADY BEAUTIFULLY domiciled in this vicinity are the Henry Hornblowers, of Beacon st., and their son and daughter-in-law, Henry Hornblower, Jr., they having one of the show places of the shore; the Sherman Whipples have acquired the Eben Jordan place and with their daughter and son-in-law, the Lothrop Withingtons, and five children, will soon be settled comfortably for the summer. Dr. and Mrs. Townsend Torbet, and Mr and Mrs. Thomas Russell are of this smart colony and many other prominent Bostonians.

He also served as minister to Holland during President Cleveland's first term. No date has been set for the wedding of Mrs. Lee to Mr. O'Donnell.

Character Building of Children Will Be Topic at Congress

The part that the home should play in the moulding and character building of children will be eruditiously discussed when the Fourth International Congress on Family Education takes place at Liege, Belgian, in August.

Conducted under the auspices of the Belgian Ligue de l'education Familiale, of which the Duchess of Vendome, sister of King Albert of the Belgians, is the president general, and M. Paul de Vuyst, vice-president, the congress will concentrate its sessions on the tasks of educating parents in the education of children.

That families the world over have similar problems will be revealed by the papers read at the congress and that children respond to certain fundamental, psychological and pedatric principles.

From Philadelphia, Mrs. Richard Toland will go, representing the Junior League of that city. Maybe the General Federation of Women's Clubs at its convention in June at Denver, will officially appoint an American clubwoman to go and present the clubwoman's point of view along lines of family rehabilitation.

Mayor of Cambridge to Open Florence Crittenton Meeting

Mayor Richard M. Russell of Cambridge will open the meeting of the Cambridge Circle of the Florence Crittenton League, May 20, at the Cantabrigia clubhouse, introducing Mrs. Elmer C. Collins and Mrs. William J. Morrison, who will present the program. A novel way to be sure and of great publicity value.

Later the mayor's wife will "do the honors" at the reception, as will Mrs. Francis D. Magee. The business meeting scheduled for 2:30 will bring forth interesting facts about the interesting work of the league.

An imposing patroness list adds further luster to the event. The same day the Massachusetts League of Women Voters will hold their two-day convention at the Hotel Commander in Cambridge.

Plea Sounded for Family Prayers

New England Traditions Are Lauded at Banquet in Hotel Statler

By NANCY BREWSTER

And more reverence for American fundamentals.

And more loyalty to parents and to the church.

If there is to be no greater disintegration of the American home, parents must "keep faith" with their sons and daughters; "step down" with their children; be "pals"? with them.

This was the message of Mrs. Eugene J. Grant, former president-general of the National Society of New England, to the organization in session at the Hotel Statler at its opening banquet.

With praise for the younger generation, their abilities and their wonderful achievements, Mrs. Grant cited the need for family prayers if the home was to be kept together and placed back on its former pedestal of worship and unification.

PLEADS FOR IDEALS

One of many after-dinner speakers, all of whom emphasized the same need, Mrs. Grant pleaded for the return of the justice, the kindness, the loyalty, the home, the faith, the church and the God, all the ideals to which the National Society of New England is pledged and on which basis it was organized some years ago.

New England traditions, rich in background, rich in principle, rich in faith were extolled and exalted to dizzy heights. The New England woman with her characteristic thrift and wisdom and righteousness was similarly lauded.

The seventeenth congress continues today and tomorrow.

There are 200 women from all over the country.

Mrs. Rixford Shows Her Big Collection of Ancestry Medals

Mrs. Elizabeth Rixford of Easthighgate, Vermont, organizer of the Vermont Colony of the National Society of New England Women, was indeed a proud woman last night with all her medals, enough to weigh down any mortal. Yet the descendant of Robert DeVere, third Earl of Oxford, England, smiled and patiently recounted the story which went with the hundreds of gold bars and patriotic colonists' symbols to the many who crowded about her for information.

Tracing the many branches of her family lineage, started as a hobby by her husband's death, each new ancestral discovery brought a greater desire to leave as legacy to her grandchildren a complete history of who she is and what her tree consisted of.

Mrs. Rixford, a Daughter of American Colonies, she has 100 ancestors; as a Daughter of the Seventeenth Century, she has 30 eligibles, and as Mayflower descendant, four give her the privilege, as a Daughter of the American Revolution she has eight descendants and three in the Society of 1812.

Mrs. Rixford didn't wear all her gold bars but she brought them all with her.

Barnstable Club Has Put Off Children's Party; Schools Aid

From "way down on the Cape" comes the news that the children's party originally planned for May 12 has been postponed until some time next month that there might be co-ordination between the schools and the Barnstable Woman's Club in backing a grand tercentenary celebration.

However, on May 12, Miss Sarah A. Bagnall of Hyannis will tell the club members all about Old Boston at a preliminary luncheon to the far-reaching celebrations planned throughout the state. There will first be a special meeting of the executive board, followed by a business meeting and then the program. Mrs. Herbert G. Cox will be hostess.

Evening Wraps Both Sumptuous and Simple

From Paris Bureau, Boston Evening American.

Paris, May 7.

THE EVENING WRAP covers a lot of territory, sartorially speaking, of course. It can be just a little wisp of a scarf, a short little cape, a coat on bolero lines, a three-quarter jacket, or a long trailing affair. The young woman, this season, has shown a decided preference for the short simple wrap, often of chiffon velvet, that is free of any trimming, thus providing a happy contrast to her full, long skirt with its crisp, flaring line.

Short jackets of ermine are also much in evidence here; also short black velvet wraps trimmed with the same pelt. However, there are always women who prefer the wrap of sumptuous fabric and lavish embellishment, and their preferences have not been overlooked by the couturiers.

Therefore, although this is specifically the season of the little wrap, there are plenty of magnificent creations to be found, and if your taste runs to a lovely wrap, richly ornamented, you will still be very much of the mode, for this is a season of individual preference in the matter of the wardrobe.

You may be all wrapped up in the little wrap, but just the same we feel that you will readily concede the claims of the rich wrap cut on more generous lines. We are, therefore, sending you two drawings of a wrap that is credited with being one of the loveliest and most sumptuous of the many handsome wraps that are on view in the latest Paquin collection.

This model is in brown georgette, richly trimmed with sable marten. It is much shorter at one side and has a diagonal or spiral line that is accentuated by the three bands of fur. In deference to the importance of the cape, the right side of the wrap is cut on circular cape lines, while the left side is cut so that the arm may be hidden inside it.

The shawl collar of fur is of even width throughout its length and ends in a becoming cape line in front. The wrap is lined with matching brown chiffon velvet.

HANDSOME WRAP of brown georgette is a creation in the Paquin collection. It is richly trimmed with sable marten. (Sketched in Paris.)

ALVIN E. BLISS DIES AT 72

Alvin E. Bliss, 72, member of the governor's council and for many years prominent in Massachusetts politics, died at his home in Fellsway East, Malden, early today.

He had attended a theater in the afternoon and a dinner party in the evening. After he retired his wife, Mrs. Nellie S. Bliss, heard a noise in his room and found him in intense agony.

She summoned Dr. Wilson E. Hunt, but Bliss was dead when he arrived. The physician said death was due to heart trouble.

In addition to his wife, Bliss is survived by a son, Harold H. Bliss, a restaurant proprietor in Malden.

For many years Bliss was associated with public utilities companies throughout the State. He served several terms in both the State House of Representatives and the Senate. He was defeated last year for re-election and was subsequently appointed to the governor's council.

LETTERS FROM READERS

SOMETHING TO THINK ABOUT

Editor Boston American:

Through your paper I was delighted to find that the new pastor of Tremont Temple approves of laughter in church.

Dr. J. Whitcomb Brougher makes religion interesting, not a vale of tears. While there must be solemn moments in divine worship in churches, some humor mixed with sermons is a good relish for any mind.

I heard a preacher in Greater Boston get this incident off in his sermon several Sundays ago. It added zest to his narrative. It was illustrating a point in his discourse. A certain woman was recently asked:

"When was your baby born?" "Let me think," she answered. "Oh, yes! The baby came between the third payment on the radio and the fifth on the automobile."

How is that for running the instalment plan for the double purpose of making it a calendar? Anyway, this story caused a snicker in the circle I was sitting with and it did not do any harm. Laughter in churches is not always out of place.

HENRY HAVILAND.

Rep. Brookings Explains Absence at Taxi Vote

Editor Boston American:

Your editorial in Saturday's American asks regarding my whereabouts on Tuesday, April 29, a question which I am very glad to answer.

More than 1000 Massachusetts women can bear witness that I was at the Hotel Statler, from 19 until four, as a guest of honor at the mass meeting and loyalty luncheon of the Women's National Committee for Law Enforcement.

Mrs. Henry W. Peabody invited me some days before, requesting that I be prepared to read the majority report (House Bill 1213) and the "additional reasons" against the repeal of the Baby Volstead Act (so-called)—a report which I had signed as a member of the legislative committee on legal affairs, before whom the petition of the wets (House Bill 203) was heard at the State House.

Owing to the unexpected crowding of the program at the luncheon, there was only time for Mrs. Peabody to present me to the audience. I was there, however, on what seemed to me proper business and my concern as the one woman Representative on the committee on legal affairs. A delegation of 20 women from Gloucester accompanied me.

The afternoon before (April 28) I had asked Rep. Victor F. Jewett, the Republican floor head of the House, what measures would probably be before the House that Tuesday. He told me he thought it very unlikely that the House council would have such a complicated bill as the "Taxicab Bill in shape for report by the committee on bills in third reading at that session.

At the conclusion of the loyalty luncheon, I went to the State House and learned to my surprise that the matter had been already taken up, with the adverse result well known to your readers.

My personal position on the taxicab situation is unchanged, as my vote in favor of the Finnegan amendments has shown today in the House.

With all good wishes for you and your paper, I am

MARTHA N. BROOKINGS.

Will to Be Well Makes for Health

Editor Boston American:

You go into an office for an order and you often find the occupant growing sour over his physical condition and moping over it. Business men in my experience with them, do not take recreation, to the extent that will keep them in a happy frame of mind.

If they have anything the matter with them don't tell them, for if there is anything they don't want to know about, it is their unhealthy condition.

It has always struck me that if they had the will to be well, they would be on the right track to keep well. The will to be well is the most important exercise of the mind to keep well. This dropping into the feeling that you are not well and thinking along these lines, puts many in an atmosphere of anxiety over an imaginary pain, I believe, for I have practiced it, the will to be well is no small part of health.

Man's Home Is No Longer His Castle

Editor Boston American:

Seizing home brew kits, the decision, of the Supreme Court, is an invasion of the homes of this country that is the greatest blow up to today to personal freedom.

A man's home is no longer his castle. If there is any place that should be protected from inroads of any kind it is the home life.

If the law cannot be enforced without this invasion, then change the law. If we cannot do what we please in our home life then what is the use of a home, when it is about to be deprived of its privacy.

When we had local option in Massachusetts in the old liquor days, there was the same underhanded drinking that now prevails. Women would carry liquor in their large purses, in small bottles, and hip flasks were as general in a dry territory as they are today. You cannot coerce people into total abstinence by flaying them with the whip of the law.

Advice to People Contemplating Divorce

Editor Boston American:

I believe with the writer of these letter in your column that married people should attend divorce proceedings in courts before they enter upon any such action.

After witnessing events in these courts, I have this to say to the wife: "Dont be jealous. Don't keep your sweetest smiles for others, but give them chiefly to your husband. Don't think of what you have done during the day, but take an interest in the happenings of your husband's life. Don't worry him when he comes home. Don't waste any of his hard earned money. Don't forget the little rift within the lute that by and by will make the music mute."

These are bona fide ideas that I culled from several divorce cases during the past two months in Boston divorce courts.

Suggests Traffic Duty for Policewomen

Editor Boston American:

The question came up the other day in a Massachusetts city, whether policewomen should receive the same training as policemen and be available for all kinds of police duty.

It is bad for a policewoman to fix her mind upon one special matter for which she, no doubt, is eminently fitted.

Why not use them more or less frequently as traffic officers? To witness the sway of a woman's hand directing autos and other vehicles might make some drivers more sensitive of their duties while under the control and dictation of a female wand. Anyway, I believe, the time is fast approaching, on account of the superfluity of women in this state, they will be asked to sit in a traffic box, and during the dull times of traffic may be seen knitting or using that inevitable powder box. Why not?

More and More on Perfume for Men

Editor Boston American:

Are men using more perfume? I met an old friend of mine in the smoking room of a Boston hotel lately, whom I have not seen for years. He told me that the men of European cities were dousing themselves with perfume, a sort of symphony of scent, that carries as many as 200 different ingredients. It is the masterpiece of some chemist in his laboratory.

He gave me a whiff of it when I went to his room and for a scent, it is a stunner. Above all, he added the women like it. That was enough for me, for I thought who wants to win a woman through scent? What are we coming to as a race, English setters or bloodhounds? Then my friend continued along this line by saying that Greeks douse themselves with perfume, the Athenian sheik has one odor for his hair, another for his face and another for the rest of his body. He thought that men here will use more perfume in the near future as many of the Europeans are doing nowadays.

EDSON DEFENDS WORK AT HUB AIRPORT

By GEORGE HAMBLIN

Replying to criticism by Harry D. Copland of the Curtiss-Wright Flying Service, Supt. Albert L. Edson declared today all plans for improvements being carried out at Boston airport were agreed on by the operators themselves.

Copland had complained that the airport was being made into a picnic park and that business was practically forbidden.

"All the plans," said Supt. Edson, "were drawn up and agreed to by the operators themselves. At a meeting in the office of Park Commissioner Long the type of fence was selected.

Before the Summer is out the Airport will assume the aspect for which we have been working and I'm sure if everybody works with us we can straighten out minor details to the satisfaction of all."

Copland also had protested admission of a new air transport company to the field and against a notice from Sut. Edson that soliciting business in front of the hangars must stop.

DAILY ANTIQUE

No. 89

Every Saturday night for the past two hundred years, this old grandfather clock has been wound by successive owners, father and son, in unbroken line. Day after day, hour after hour, the faithful works have turned, and the sturdy hands have pointed to the exact time with unfailing precision.

The old clock, with its heavy iron weights and carved walnut frame, is owned by Dr. J. P. Thornton of 361 Commonwealth ave., Boston. It came down to him from his great grandfather, Thomas Gilbert Thornton of Saco, Me.

In connection with the Massachusetts Tercentenary Year, the Boston Evening American is publishing daily photographs of interesting antiques. Owners of genuine antiques, particularly of Colonial or early American origin or of historic association are invited to forward photographs and records for publication. If a photograph is not available, the American will send a cameraman to photograph the antique, provided the owner lives in Greater Boston. Address the "Antique Editor, 5 Winthrop sq., Boston."

The domestic help problem is solved by taking a kitchenette apartment and the best are advertised daily in the For Rent columns.

4TH ARREST IN PRISON RIOT

Providence, R. I., May 7 (AP)—Napoleon F. Potvin, 30, of Woonsocket, was held by Cranston police today for questioning about the attempted jail delivery at Rhode Island State prison April 19, when three men were killed.

Potvin, police said, has been identified by boys of the neighborhood as one of two men in a car who asked the way to the prison just before the riot, and by three visitors at the prison as one of those present when shooting started.

Potvin is the fourth man arrested in the case. John Condelmo and John Conlarusso of North Berne, N. J., and Ernest Condelmo of Providence are held in the murder of Peleg Champlin, a trusty, killed as he attempted to sound the alarm.

Pretty Bride, Mrs. M. Standish, says

"I'm never going to have 'Dishpan Hands'"

AREN'T THEY CLEVER . . . these pretty young modern brides?

Mrs. Standish is one of thousands who write delightedly—

"We do all our own work, yet our hands look so dainty, so exquisitely cared for—you'd think we had a whole staff of maids at our call!"

They themselves discovered the secret . . . Washing their fine things in Lux, they noticed how nice their hands look afterward. Then they began using Lux for dishes—other soap and water tasks, too.

How quickly their hands showed the difference!

So many soaps, you see, contain harmful alkali which dries up the natural oils of the skin. Leaves it roughened and reddened.

You can feel how different Lux is. Those delicate, sparkling Lux suds haven't a trace of harshening alkali . . . bland, soothing, they tend your hands gently . . . cherish their smooth, white beauty.

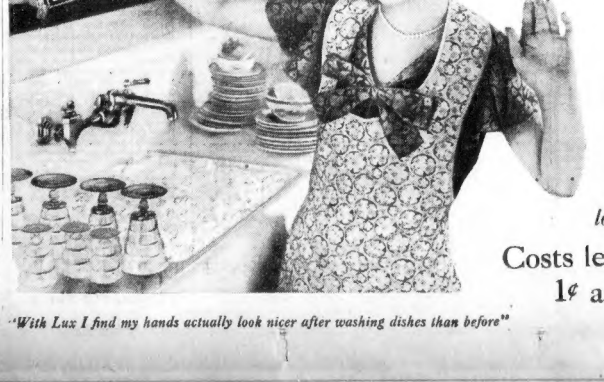
Yet this fine beauty care for your hands costs almost nothing. Lux for all your dishes costs less than 1¢ a day!

LIKE THOUSANDS of modern brides, Mrs. M. Standish does all her own work, yet keeps her hands looking lovely with Lux. "I resolved"—she writes—"I'd never have 'dishpan hands'—so I use Lux for dishes, for cleaning, for most everything!"



"With Lux I find my hands actually look nicer after washing dishes than before"

LUX has helped millions of wives to have lovely hands

THE OFFICE WIFE: By Faith Baldwin

en, Man!" repeated Anne, in disgust. "Bird of prey would be better! I don't know why he wants to take you away with him," Anne went on.

"He—loves me," Kathleen told her in a small voice.

"He doesn't. He can't know the meaning of the word," Anne answered. She shuddered. "If I thought — if I thought that he planned to exploit you!"

There was a silence, and then Kathleen shrieked suddenly:

"What is it? Oh, do be quiet," Anne implored her, frantic with fear and foreboding. "Tell me, Kathleen. It doesn't matter what you've done—only tell me."

"I haven't done anything," Kathleen told her unhappily, "only—I just remembered."

"What—what have you remembered?"

"A man—George said he wanted to meet him. I was to be nice to him. He was an old man with lots of money. He owns a string of night clubs."

Anne said quickly: "You see?"

"I don't want to see. No, I'll not believe it. He's been so dear —such fun. It's all Dolly's lies, Anne; jealous lies!"

"No. Listen, I'll get into bed with you—it isn't long till morning. Promise me that you won't see him or write until we've talked it over again quietly. I'll come tomorrow after work. Now, I'm so tired, Kathleen."

She pulled off her clothes, found a nightgown of her sister's, and a few moments afterward lay beside her in the narrow bed. Her arms went about the younger girl's smooth, warm body; she pressed her cheek to the round shoulder.

"You're—crying, Anne?" Kathleen's voice was awed. She hadn't seen Anne cry in years.

"It's all right. Don't mind. I'm tired and miserable."

"On my account," Kathleen thought. She turned and took Anne in her arms.

"I'll do as you say," she promised. "Perhaps you're right. I don't know. I'll be good, Anne; I swear it. I'll wait. If he really loves me, he'll—he'll prove that these things aren't true."

But that is the beginning of wisdom. She knew in her young, easily pierced—as easily healed—heart that these things were true.

"I was—I am," she corrected herself, "so crazy about him. And it was so—exciting."

There was the keynote, Anne realized, but was too tired to think it out.

She said drowsily:

"Hush. Try to sleep. We'll talk tomorrow."

"I know. But if you ever cared about any one, you'd understand."

"If do care about some one with all my heart," Anne told her. "Some one fine and wonderful and worth while."

Kathleen held her closer. "Anne, who is it? Are you going to be married?"

"He doesn't know I exist," Anne told herself wearily. "And he isn't free to marry me even if he did know, and if he wanted me. I'd go to him tomorrow, if it wouldn't harm him. But it would. So I can't—and even if it didn't hurt him I want more than just makeshift. I'm telling you because you're the dearest thing in the world to me—except that one other person. And I want you to know that I understand what love can do to people. Only, forgive me, darling, I don't think you have loved any one—not yet."

She was asleep before she had time to regret her confession. But Kathleen lay awake. Anne in love! Ted? But Ted was crazy about her—and Ted was free. Who, then? Suddenly she knew.

Oh, poor Anne, thought Kathleen. And presently slept, one arm flung as if protectingly over the other girl.

She was still sleeping when Anne rose next morning and tiptoed out. Lola slept, too, and Sally, her roommate. Anne scribbled a note to Kathleen:

"Remember your promise. I'll be in this evening."

Things went wrong that day. She made half a dozen foolish mistakes, "Toward the close of the afternoon, Eaton spoke with concern:

"Miss Murdock, what's the matter? You're so unlike yourself. Are you ill?" he asked, unable to conceal his solicitude.

"No." She forced herself to smile. "No. I was up almost all night."

"Some one threw a late party?" he asked, much disliking this probable explanation. She shook her head. "Illness in the family?" he probed further.

"No," she answered, thinking it was illness, after all. For Kathleen was sick of a malignant fever, a poison in the blood.

"Can't you tell me," Eaton begged. "You—you've been pretty generous with me. I'd like to feel—his voice deepened—"that I'm your friend."

His heart cried out there: "And your lover, Anne; always your lover!"

She had no one to whom to turn. Her parents were out of the question. Ted? She knew what Ted would say, and even Betty Howard, good comrade that she was, could not help her here. She felt terribly inconsistent. She could handle Eaton's affairs, keep her head in his emergencies. She could even muddle through her own problems alone. But when her own flesh and blood was darkly threatened she felt that she could not fight the battle single-handed, and this man was strong and sane. She could trust him—and she loved him.

"Can't you tell me?" he repeated.

So, stumbling a little, she gave him chapter and verse, ending with her visit to Dolly and her talk—part of it—with Kathleen.

"She promised; I think she was frightened. But if she goes him again, or thinks it over and believes that I've lied, I don't know what she'll do. She's headstrong, Mr. Eaton."

Eaton had listened, frowning. "You'll have to get her away from that crowd," he suggested. "Couldn't you live with her?"

Anne said thoughtfully: "I never thought of that."

"Would she consent?"

"I think so."

"If you do," Eaton advised seriously, "don't put too many restrictions on her—beyond this man. She's been used to liberty for a little while. You can't take the hen-and-one-chick attitude."

"I know. But—oh, if he'd only leave town," said Anne wretchedly. "I know things would come out all right."

"We'll see. Find out his name. I have powerful friends at headquarters. You say he plays the races and has no other visible means of support? They keep dossiers, even in this country. They'll give a man rope enough and when he's ready to hang himself they have the goods on him," Eaton told her. "I think that I can arrange to have him receive an official warning that he'd better clear out of New York alone."

"If you would! If he goes," Anne said, relief in her heart and eyes and voice, "Dolly would join him, I'm sure."

"So much the better. Find out his name tonight and call me at the house."

"I hate to trouble you. I'm so grateful—"

"You don't. I don't do half a quarter enough for you. I never can," he told her.

That night Anne found Kathleen restless, inclined to regret her promise, on the defensive, abusive of Dolly, of gossip, sure that it couldn't be so. But Anne managed to make her give her word that she would not see the man for a few days at least. Meantime, Anne discovered the name he went by—D'Argent—and from a booth telephoned the name and address to Eaton.

Two days later Mr. George D'Argent left town hurriedly—and without a word to Kathleen. But Anne had a hasty scrawl from Dolly:

Kid, I don't know how you did it, but Georgie and me are on our way on separate trains. He's promised to be a good boy. I think he'll marry me now. I've got the promise of a job, and everything looks rosy.

It was signed: "Fondly yours, Doll."

Anne showed the note to Kathleen. The girl read it, threw it on the floor, burst into angry tears.

"She's a cat!" sobbed Kathleen. "He couldn't have cared for you so much," commented Anne, with studied brutality.

But Kathleen fled and locked herself in the bedroom.

Anne let her alone for a time after that. In the interim she had a talk with her parents and told them that she was moving to town.

"Kathleen isn't happy with her friends," she explained, "and she can't come home. It's much better for her in the city. She doesn't want to be alone, and it seems wise and practical for us to take a place together. Don't cry, mother; I'll come home often."

Later Molly asked shrewdly: "Kathleen? The child's misbehaving?"

"No, dear," Anne told her. "Only she's very young and I don't like the people she travels with. She'll never come home to live; she's way past that. It will be better if we are together."

Mrs. Murdock nodded her gallant red head. "I don't know what you're keeping back," she said slowly. "I suppose Kathleen's been headstrong and foolish. But you've a good head and a clear eye, and it's all right with me, Anne, and I'll make it right with himself."

Anne moved to two rooms and bath and a real kitchen on West 8th st. and a subdued Kathleen moved with her.

Proceed with Anne's new responsibility in tomorrow's instalment.

GROSS REVENUE DOUBLED

SUE BROWN HAD FAIR TRIAL, COURT RULES

Salinas, Cal., May 7 (UB)—Dragged from home before she had time to gather up an extra piece of clothing, tried, sentenced and rushed off to jail all in the space of half an hour—Mrs. Sue Brown nevertheless had a fair trial.

Such was the decision made known today of Superior Judge H. G. Jorgensen in denying the appeal of the "jail mother," whose conviction and consequent suffering for possession of three cases of home-brew shocked the nation.

APPEAL PLANNED

Her attorney announced steps would be taken at once for an appeal to the higher court.

Judge Jorgensen admitted in his decision that the records of the justice court committing Mrs. Brown had been altered after the conviction as charged by the plaintiff.

Regardless of the "doctoring of the docket," as charged by the defense, the court held that the young mother had a hearing that met all the technical requirements.

CONDITIONS IGNORED

The fact that she had never been in a court of law before, that the judge was in a hurry to get to lunch, that she was unable to reach her husband by phone—these things were of no consequence on the hair-balanced scales of justice.

Since being released from a hospital—the hospital where she was taken after a lonely night of agony during which her baby was born and died while she was unattended —after interest ✱ person paid her fine, Mrs. Brown has been living near Los Angeles with her children and mother.

Boxing Promoters Laugh Off the Heat Wave

WHAT CARE fight promoters for a mere hot wave!

Col. Bob McKirdy, a bundle of pictures under one arm, brushed the beads of perspiration from his noble brow and parked himself next to Mr Boston's desk

Jack Conway

"The Arena A. C. will bring boxing back to Boston at the Arena on Friday night," confided the Colonel. "Harry Allen of Brockton will try to tap Arthur Flynn of Lawrence right on the chin.

"This bird Allen is one of the best sockers in the light heavyweight class. And he won't be tackling a push-over when he mingles with Flynn.

"Don't want to take up too much of your time, but I would like to mention it will be a whale of a scrap when Tommy Rawson, Jr., breezes with Joey Conley of Dorchester in the semifinal of eight sessions."

The Colonel tipped Bill Grimes he is getting off some great iron shots at the Waltham Country Club, and then went merrily on his way.

Joe Monte and Mack Talk About Herr Max

EDDIE MACK of the Argonne A. A. and Joe Monte dropped in to bello Mr. Boston.

"Joe is fighting Al Friedman again at Mechanics Building," said Mack. "These birds recently furnished a torrid mill at the Garden. If Monte hadn't suffered an injury to one of his eyes he probably would have won the duke."

"You fought Schmeling, didn't you?" said Mr. Boston, turning to Monte.

"Yes," was the modest reply. "I clashed with Max in New York a year ago last spring. He is credited with stopping me in eight rounds, but I was anxious and able to keep going in when the referee intervened. The German is a good fighter, but I don't think he can beat Jack Sharkey. I have boxed a great deal with Jack in the training camp and he carries too many guns for the German."

"How about this fellow Friedman?" pressed Mr. Boston.

"I'll take care of him," shot back Monte. "We have met on numerous occasions, and the only time he ever outscored me was in our last match. He wouldn't have done so then if I hadn't suffered an injury to one of my eyes. This time it will be different."

MacLean Says McCarthy Has Plenty of Fire

ALEX MacLEAN, matchmaker of the Garden, pagged Mr. Boston on the telephone.

"I just took a peek at Pat McCarthy in training," said Alex. "He looked very good. McCarthy will give Kayo Christner all kinds of trouble when they get tangled up at the Garden on next Monday night. Since knocking out Jimmy Weiss of Philadelphia, McCarthy believes he can conquer any of the so-called stand out heavyweights."

Sharkey Weighs 202 After Hard Workout

MR. BOSTON watched Jack Sharkey step through an eight-round workout at Jim Toland's gym. Sharkey then hopped on the scales.

"How much?" queried Mr. Boston.

"Just 202," replied Sharkey.

"When do you shove off for Orangeburg?"

"Sunday."

"I will be tucked away in the back seat of Sharkey's car," volunteered Al Lacy.

"Order a steak pending my arrival on Wednesday," advised Johnny Buckley.

"The fight is only a little more than a month away," went on Sharkey.

"What are you going to do to Schmeling?" queried Dick Sears, moving picture operator, who had just "shot" a flock of film and some talking stuff about Jack.

"Give him the same treatment I handed out to Loughran," replied Sharkey.

"Sharkey," said Mr. Boston, "is to be tendered a dinner Saturday night. It will be attended by friends and admirers of the American heavyweight champion. All they ask is for Jack to chill Schmeling.

"Sharkey has been installed a 6 to 5 favorite in the early betting in New York.

"The Red Sox at least went down fighting."

SCOTT CLAIMS HEAVY TITLE

By CHARLES A. SMITH

London, May 7.—Phil Scott is angry. He is beginning to think nobody loves him.

Since his return here from American, where his fight with Jack Sharkey at Miami ended in complete fiasco, Fireman Phil has been waiting for the British boxing board of control to pronounce him heavyweight champion of the world.

The board has failed to do so, and what Phil thinks about the board is not fit to print.

With his chest swelling with indignation and a voice that was deep and angry, Phil delivered himself of the following when interviewed at his home:

"Fah! I am finished with boxing so far as the board is concerned. Let them go and find another champion. I'm not going to fight until they wake up.

"They can have my British heavyweight championship and tell anyone they like to fight for it. I will not fight anyone they select until they acclaim me champion of the world.

"Even Americans admit that I licked Sharkey, and that the fight was a blot on decent boxing; yet England does nothing to put matters right.

"Until the board of control supports me I shall rest. I am not in training, and although I could have fights in America and England I shall not do anything for the present."

Jack Sharkey to Be Honored at Dinner

The many friends and admirers of Jack Sharkey are to tender him a testimonial dinner this coming Saturday evening at 6:30 at the Parker House, the day before he departs for New York, where he will continue his training for the big fight of the year with Max Schmeling, which takes place June 12 at the Yankee Stadium.

Big League BASEBALL

Throwing From Outfield

By AL DEMAREE

(Former Pitcher of N. Y. Giants)

Next to being a sure catch of a fly ball and being able to cover ground, it is most essential for an outfielder to have a good throwing arm.

If possible try to catch the ball at the shoulder so there is no lost motion in drawing the arm back in the act of throwing.

Throw the ball overhand from the outfield. A ball thrown side arm has a tendency to curve and bounce off line when it hits the ground.

Also a ball thrown overhand gains an extra impetus when it hits and does not die as side arm balls often do.

Always throw on a line and bounce the ball to the catcher or infielder to whom you are throwing, unless the throw is a very short one.

A "rainbow" throw that reaches the catcher on the "fly," never catches a base runner.

Do not make a useless throw to the plate when your team is several runs ahead. Let the run score and throw to second base and keep the batter on first where he cannot score on a single.

Smith Qualifies in $7500 Tourney

Southport, England, May 7 — Horton Smith, brilliant young American golfer, scored a 74 in each of the first two qualifying rounds of the $7500 professional tourney today.

The Joplin, Mo., professional was the only American among the more than 200 who teed off. Smith qualified comfortably, but did not lead the field.

Smith did not extend himself at any time during the day's play. He seemed content to play a safe game throughout, which is evident from his card which showed that he had only one 6 for the 36 holes.

CAMPOLO BOUT FOR WINNER

The winner of the Pat McCarthy-K. O. Christner match at the Garden Monday night will meet Vittorio Campolo, Argentine giant, in the feature bout of the annual Crosscup-Pinhos tournament at the Garden May 27.

Campolo is one of the greatest looking prospects ever to invade this country.

McCarthy is bubbling over with confidence as he marches through his daily training sessions at Kelley & Hayes' Gymnasium.

Ted Moore, veteran English middleweight, was added to his staff of spar-mates yesterday afternoon, and ran into a McCarthy who is punching more fiercely than at any time in his career.

Between You and Me

Schmeling in Public Eye Crowd Follows Foreigner Winner Will Be Champ

By DAMON RUNYON

New York, May 7—No foreign fighter—not even the great Georges Carpentier, of France, arriving here for his battle with Jack Dempsey—has ever received the amount of public attention that has been bestowed upon Max Schmeling since he landed on American soil Sunday morning.

I rather imagine the Black Uhlan himself must still be a little bit dazed by the hubbub. In his home land he is very popular, but his popularity never reached the roar that has resounded in his ears here. No one gets any great amount of fuss over the German who has sailed away after beating Paolino, and he must be somewhat confused over the present clamor.

It is difficult to explain, at that, I suppose it is because Herr Max not only has natural appeal to the public imagination, but that he has grown in fistic stature in the eyes of the proletariat while he was absent, and the ringworms had time to ponder and weigh his deeds.

Damon Runyon

They have apparently come to the conclusion that he can fight, and after all fighting ability is what makes a fighter popular.

Then, too, I think a certain amount of resentment has developed against Jack Sharkey since his showing against Phil the Painter at Miami.

The ringworms are convinced that he fouled Old Phil, and even while conceding that Phil couldn't fight, the ringworms believe the slighter got a raw deal and blame Sharkey. A lot of them want to see him licked, that's the truth of the matter.

Dempsey Was in Similar Situation

THE MANASSA MAULER was in the same spot in public estimation when Georges Carpentier came over here, fairly aflame with the color of his war record and his personality. The crowd rose to him with a wild cheer.

He was merely a lightweight fighting a big heavyweight, and his future was well behind him, so common sense should have told the mob that Carpentier didn't have the ghost of a chance with the human tiger that was Dempsey.

The desire to see the mauler massacred was so strong that the crowd was willing to believe all the illusions of the Ballyhoo for Carpentier.

It was after that fight that Dempsey began rising to real popularity. The tide turned in his favor as the proletariat found that he could really fight—and fight with the world against him, with his back to the wall.

Thus however strong may be the desire of some persons to see Sharkey get a pasting, they will probably be hoorsying for him if he downs the German.

But just at present Herr Max holds the limelight, and beside him the once picturesque ex-sailor seems dull and drab. But picturesqueness doesn't decide fights. If it did, Carpentier would have been champion of the world for a long term. The wiser noggins among the ringworms are not forgetting that Sharkey is a pretty shifty customer inside those ropes.

Bout Recognized as for "Heavy" Title

THE FIGHT BETWEEN Schmeling and Sharkey on the night of June 12, at the Yankee Stadium, under the auspices of the famous Milk Fund, of which Mrs. William Randolph Hearst is chairman, will be recognized as for the heavyweight title, not only by the New York commission, but by all the most powerful commissions of the country.

That is to say, by the commissions of the big states in which boxing is legalized.

The Muldoon-Tunney trophy committee will also undoubtedly approve the bout as for the title, and the name of the winner will go on the big bronze statue that now stands in the lobby of Madison Square Garden. It was the Muldoon-Tunney trophy committee, in fact, that was largely responsible for the heavyweight elimination bouts since the retirement of Gene Tunney, which reduced the field of title contenders to Sharkey and Schmeling.

Moreover, Nat Fleischer, editor of the Ring, foremost of the American boxing publications, has donated a handsome belt emblematic of the heavyweight championship, and similar to the championship belts awarding other title holders by the New York boxing writers.

The clarity of the title claim of the winner of the Sharkey-Schmeling bout cannot be questioned. After two cards, a successor to Gene Tunney is at last in sight.

Schmeling Has Chance to Gain Glory

IF SCHMELING SHOULD win, it will be the first time in 22 years that the title has been held by any other than an American, or since the tenure of Tommy Burns, the Canadian. In that period, three foreigners have contended for the title on American soil. I take no account of the chocolate battles in which John Arthur Johnson engaged in his rambles while champion.

I OBSERVE THAT SHARKEY and Schmeling are picking the weak spots in each other's record. Sharkey refers to Schmeling's knockout by Gypsy Daniels, and Schmeling mentions the flattening of Sharkey by Quentin Romero Rosa.

Just so did his opponent's once refer to the knockout of the great Dempsey by Fireman Jim Flynn, and the defeat of Tunney by Harry Greb.

RINGE DOWNS LATIN, 7 TO 1

Ringe Tech went into second place in the Suburban League race by beating Cambridge Latin, 7 to 1, yesterday at Russell Field. The win also figured in the University City title. Coach McLaughlin's boys made a killing in the first inning with four runs when Sarausky, the all-around star athlete, pitcher and outfielder, clicked out a three-bagger with the sacks loaded. He scored on a wild pitch.

Later, Anderson singled and stole and Royle scored him with a single. Another run came across when with two on Kelley, who had relieved Casey on the Cantab mound in the sixth, attempted to make a force out at third and threw wild. The last Ringe run was made with the bases loaded when the Latin shortstop made an error.

The Harvard freshmen have swept through all opponents, beating Harvard seconds 5 to 3, M. I. T. freshmen 8 to 1, Milton Academy 10 to 2, and Springfield 7 to 2.

Mrs. March Wins Opening Tourney

New York, May 7 (US) — Mrs. Henry March of the North Shore Country Club today won the season's opening tournament of the Women's Metropolitan Golf Association yesterday.

The medal competition, a single round affair, was got on the Garden City Country Club amid conditions that, while they were ideal so far as the weather was concerned were a trifle harsh underfoot. The fairways were soft and rainy but the greens were faster than had been anticipated so early in the season.

BINGHAM'S PLAN MAY BE ACCEPTED

Simultaneous publication of similar editorials in Harvard and Princeton student publications today indicated that a new drive was underway to force President Lowell and Director "Bill" Bingham, of Harvard, to resume athletic relations with the "Tiger."

Princeton appears divided on the question of the "Big Three" agreement in football, many Princeton men believing that Harvard and Princeton should get together regardless of whether Princeton is given equal recognition with Yale on the Crimson football schedule.

Bingham, speaking for official Harvard, declares relations will be resumed only if Princeton will accept a comparatively minor position on the Harvard schedule. He said:

"Harvard will agree to resumption only on the short-term, dual contract which is the basis of Harvard's relations with all colleges but Yale."

The campaign was discussed at several conferences between Rose and the Crimson editors. On March 7 Rose came to Cambridge and talked with Bingham in a further attempt to remove the difficulties between the former rival institutions.

That Princeton is likely to accept Harvard's ultimatum is seen in the following statement, quoted from the Princetonian which appeared today:

STUDENTS UNITED

"The Princetonian holds no special brief for the triple agreement. That it carried a vigorous and beneficial influence on intercollegiate sports is, of course, our firm conviction."

Editors of the Crimson stated today that the present move did not originate either at Princeton or Harvard, but was the result of simultaneous action by representatives of both universities.

The following is the editorial which appeared in today's Crimson, reflecting the Harvard attitude on the subject:

"Harvard and Princeton undergraduates ask for the resumption of athletic relations between their two universities. Cordial good feeling has replaced the ill-will and misunderstandings which were among the reasons for the rupture of 1926. In Cambridge and in Princeton the students desire to acknowledge an existing esteem in the tangible form of sports. Amid the confusion of newspaper rumors, they wonder what it is that keeps two friends from meeting.

NO HOSTILITY

"That two undergraduate bodies, cordially friendly in all existing contacts, should then stand apart on the athletic field like two spanked children, must seem, to the outside observer at least, another sign of collegiate immaturity. The reason is more fundamental than this. The estrangement is the product, not of hostile feelings between Princeton and Harvard men, but of divergent Harvard and Princeton athletic policies. Harvard desires that all her athletic relations be based on dual contracts, while Princeton has in the past stood for a triangular contract between Yale, Princeton and Harvard. Failure to adjust these two policies has kept the universities apart.

FAVORS DUAL PLAN

"In its attempt to bring about mutual athletic relations, the Crimson stands unequivocally behind existing Harvard athletic policy. The positions of Harvard and Princeton undergraduates, as expressed by their publications, present no irreconcilable differences. The Crimson advocates the resumption of athletic relations with Princeton on a dual basis. The position of Harvard men, as expressed this morning in the editorial of the Daily Princetonian, is not fundamentally opposed to the Crimson's stand.

"The negotiations which the Crimson and the Princetonian have initiated have by no means reached a deadlock. Neither pride nor memories of former unfriendliness need present difficulties can long stand in the way of a united undergraduate front."

Unfounded rumors that the campaign had proved a "flop" were given by the Crimson editors as the reason for announcing the campaign at this time.

White Sox Bunch Hits in Fifth to Defeat Red Sox, 4-3

ED MORRIS IS KNOCKED OFF MOUND

By JOE CASHMAN

One inning beat the Red Sox in the first game of the series with the Chicago White Sox.

They held the invaders from the Windy City scoreless in every frame except the fifth, but allowed them to count four times in that stanza, and could only make three runs for themselves off Ted Lyons.

Joe Cashman

It was a good ball game to watch, tense and exciting all the way. Neither team made an error and both turned in several sparkling plays.

Ed Morris, starting his first game of the year for the Sox, was the losing pitcher. He set the enemy down in order to two of the first four frames, but he weakened in the fifth, and before he could get the third man out he had been found for a triple, three singles, a walk and a sacrifice, all of which netted the visitors four runs.

Ed "Bull" Durham, making his first appearance in the Sox lineup this season, relieved Morris and his great pitching during the last four rounds took some of the sting out of the visitors' defeat.

He didn't allow a single hit or base on balls. Only one of the 12 men who faced him were able to hit the ball hard. If the youngster had been started, the result might have been different.

Lyons Always Able to Get Out of Danger

In justice to Lyons, however, it must be said that he deserved to win, even though he allowed ten hits while his mates were making but seven.

He was in several tough spots but always managed to pull himself out and had his mates support been up to the standard, it is questionable whether he would have been scored on.

In the first frame, he was found for singles by Oliver and Webb but didn't allow a run.

Oliver singled to open the third and went to third when Reynolds dropped a liner in right, which Cissell would probably have caught and turned into a double play had he not slipped going after the ball. Oliver scored as Webb was being thrown out.

The second Sox run came in the third when Regan walked, Durham on a drive which Watwood, Chicago's centerfielder, should have held to a single, and came in when Todt was being thrown out.

Watwood opened the fifth for the enemy by singling. Kamm hit a triple, which Oliver just failed to reach, and Metzler, batting for Riddle, walked.

Lyons came through with a single to score Kamm and send Metzler to third. Cissell singled, scoring Metzler and sending Lyons to third. The hurler scored the winning run on Shires' sacrifice fly.

King Solomon K. O.'s Tiger Dixon in 5th

Portsmouth, N. H., May 7—King Solomon of New York knocked out Tiger Tom Dixon of Dover in the fifth round of their scheduled 10-round bout before the Progress A. A. here last night. Dixon put up a good fight, but was outclassed.

Jimmy Murphy of Somerville, Mass., and Herbert Beck of Portland, Me., fought hammer and tongs from the opening bell, the decision going to Murphy. Rick Francis of Portsmouth knocked out Johnny Hogan of Watertown, Mass., in the second round.

DAVE SHADE IS SUSPENDED

Los Angeles, May 7 (AP)—Dave Shade, Concord, Cal., middleweight contender, and Mike Hector, Los Angeles, former Navy champion, today stood suspended by the State Athletic Commission after a scheduled 10-round boxing match was called no contest in the ninth round here last night.

Shade led all the way, but the fight appeared slow most of the time. In the seventh round both fighters went to the canvas in a clinch and Hector appeared in pain, indicating he had been hit low. The former Navy fighter was helped to his corner and after a few minutes' rest continued the fight.

The "no contest" ruling automatically suspends the boxers pending investigation by the State Athletic Commission. Their purse will be held up. Shade is scheduled to meet Ace Hopkins in a 10-round match here May 20.

Infected Tooth Cause of Rockne's Illness

South Bend, Ind., May 6 (AP)—The illness that kept Knute Rockne from active direction of the Notre Dame football squad during most of the 1929 football season was caused by an infected tooth.

This was revealed by the Rev. Charles O'Donnell, president of the university, in an address before the Notre Dame Club of St. Joseph Valley here. Last fall it had been reported the Irish football coach was suffering from an infected knee.

Rockne, who has been at a Rochester, Minn., clinic, is expected to return Saturday to watch the Notre Dame gridmen in final spring practice.

High Foot Back in Public Favor

Louisville, Ky., May 7 (INS)—High Foot was back in public favor again today following the gratifying Kentucky Derby workout turned in yesterday on the track here.

Working with Buddy Bassi and with Carl Meyer aboard, High Foot zipped off a quarter in 0:24, half in 0:49 3-5 and six furlongs in 1:14 3-5, under a pull. He merely breezed seven furlongs in 1:28 2-5 and galloped out the mile in 1:44 3-5.

Flaherty Post Show on Tonight

All is in readiness for the boxing show and entertainment of the Lieut. J. Flaherty Post, No. 30, the American Legion, to be held this evening in the Gem Theater on Meridian st., East Boston. A monster program is billed for the show.

Mrs. Baker Sole Undefeated Player in Women's Golf Asso.

By BILL GRIMES

Since the previous publication of the individual standings of the Woman's Golf Association of Boston, Miss Grace English of the northern district has been defeated, leaving Mrs. E. H. Baker, Jr., the perennial champion, as the only player who has participated in seven matches without a defeat.

Also the ranks of those players who have suffered only one defeat has been thinned out during the past week. Of the first team players who have played in every match this season, Miss Marie Bourneuf, Miss Margaret Curtis, Miss Grace English, Mrs. W. J. Hallinan and Mrs. Mavis Pettrson are the only six-time winners.

Of this quintet Miss Bourneuf, Miss English and Mrs. Peterson are newcomers to W. G. A. first team competition, but Miss Curtis and Mrs. Hallnan are seasoned veterans.

Mrs. Fred W. Tarr, Jr., of Northern, has won a total of 51 points but four of her matches were with the second team. Since she has been promoted to the varsity, however, Mrs. Tarr has been on the winning end of all three matches, one of which turned the tide in favor of her team, and was responsible for the only defeat Midland has encountered this season.

Miss Kennedy Playing Exceptional Game

Another new varsity player who is making a most creditable showing is Miss M. M. Kennedy of Midland. For years Miss Kennedy was on the second team and did not get an opportunity to show her ability until this spring. She has won five out of her seven matches and one of the defeats was a 19-hole match.

Mrs. Clark T. Baldwin, another Midland player, has established a perfect record this spring. Mrs. Baldwin has won five matches but she was unable to participate in the other two contests.

Mrs. A. G. Carver, who went through the first five matches with flying colors, was eliminated from the undefeated class last Thursday and is now sharing the first place honors on the second team players with Mrs. Florence Marsh of Midland. Mrs. Carver and Mrs. Marsh have won six matches.

Mrs. Carver played through most of last season with the Central first team and therefore it is not surprising that she has been unbeatable.

But, on the other hand, Mrs. Marsh was not a very consistent point winner until this year, but, judging from the golf she has been playing, she will be entitled to a promotion next year.

JONES HITS 72 IN PRACTICE

London, May 7 (INS)—Members of the American Walker Cup team, headed by Bobby Jones, engaged in a four-ball foursome practice match over the Addington course today.

The Atlanta wizard struck his stride from the first tee, turning in a 72 for the eighteen holes. Voight turned in a card of 77, Willing an 85 and Moe an 89.

Bobby gave the spectator a genuine treat. He took only 12 putts for the outgoing nine, and three each on the tenth and eleventh greens. He scored an eagle three at the 500-yard twelfth.

All four members of the team were somewhat hampered by unseasonably cold weather.

BRAVES EVEN UP SERIES

Cincinnati, O., May 7—Bunching enough hits off Pete Donahue in the first two innings to score four runs, the Braves evened the series with the Reds by taking the second game, 4 to 3.

Harry "Socks" Seibold, on the mound for the Tribe, allowed one run in the first and two in the fifth while chalking up his fourth straight victory of the season.

Errors by Walker and Meusel upset Donahue considerably but he also helped the visitors' cause by giving seven bases on balls.

He was never in danger of being scored upon after the second but the damage had already been done.

Maranville with a single and a double in four trips to the platter, led the Braves' attack while Callaghan, with the same record, was the outstanding native slugger.

In the third game of the series this afternoon, Vic Aldridge, veteran southpaw, is due to twirl for the Reds while Bob Smith, a right-hander, is expected to be the enemy's choice.

SCHMELING MUST WAIT FOR LICENSE

New York, May 7 (US)—The great reconciliation scene, scheduled at the New York boxing commission yesterday turned out to be nothing more or less than a mass meeting of the New York Bar Association.

As a result, Max Schmeling is still without a license to box in this state and the signing of articles for his 15-round Milk Fund match against Jack Sharkey has been indefinitely postponed. The commissioners had to listen to so many attorneys that they had no time left to do any work.

Schmeling's application for a license will be granted at the next meeting of the commission, Chairman James A. Farley announced after Schmeling had appeared in person and agreed to the following conditions:

1—That he will defend the heavyweight title in New York within 12 months if he defeats Sharkey.

2—That he will meet an opponent approved by the commission.

3—That the match will be staged by a promoter acceptable to the commission, provided the terms are equal to others that may be offered.

Farley was non-committal on the prospects of Joe Jacobs, Schmeling's favorite manager, who also applied for a license. Jacobs' license was revoked with that of Schmeling last October.

Schmeling appeared before the commission accompanied by Charlie White, his lawyer, who is also the lawyer for Jacobs. Three others, all claiming "bits" in Schmeling's earnings, were also on hand, and each was accompanied by a lawyer.

The legal representation was further augmented by the appearance of attorneys representing Primo Carnera, the disbarred Italian,

"The MOST STUPENDOUS ACT EVER PERFORMED, FOLKS," shouted Ballyhoo Bertram.

"Step inside and see Professor Szumlka swallow a three-foot sword. It's a marvelous feat, folks."

"Oh! Daddy!" whispered little Willie Woggle. "That man must have a strong throat to do that."

"Yes, Son," answered William Woggle, Sr. "No doubt the professor smokes OLD GOLDS. No harm can touch a throat protected by them."

JACK SHARKEY GOT START IN BOSTON

By JACK SHARKEY
American Heavyweight Champion

When the Denver ploughed her way through the waters of Boston harbor one cold day in January, 1924, and docked in Charlestown, little did I dream that I was about to start a career as a professional boxer which would eventually lead to a world's championship battle.

I was glad when the Denver reached the base at Charlestown. We were then presented an opportunity to visit Boston, which has always been a red-hot fight town.

Naturally I had read all about John L. Sullivan, Sam Langford, Honey Mellody, the Sullivan twins, Matty Baldwin, Jimmy Walsh, Al Delmont, Jimmy Gardner, George Gardner, Phil Powers, Kid Goodman and other famous fighting men who had campaigned out of the Hub.

The Denver was in Boston but a few days when Joe Lavelle, who had charge of the boxers aboard ship, suggested that we mitt wielders work out at a gym operated by Harry Kelley.

Kelley later became my trainer and is an expert on physical conditions as well as a smart man to have in a corner in an important fight.

BUCKLEY IMPRESSED

Johnny Buckley, my present manager, saw me boxing at Kelley's gym. Unable to get sparring partners, I was clowning around with Johnny Varca, a bantamweight who later twice defeated Fidel LaBarba.

Buckley asked me how long I had been boxing and later arranged for me to workout with Tom Cotter, a professional boxer.

Johnny was so impressed by my showing against Cotter that he asked me to go under his management and turn pro. I readily agreed to this arrangement.

Early in 1924 Manager Buckley fed me what today might be called Prime Cronet Dodger fer three bouts only Dan Lucas, Bill Muldoon (a great name anyway) and Pat Delaney.

They were bumped off in Round 2, 1 and 2 respectively. Then Fiedler served with a considerably harder dish, namely Eddie Wenzel, who knew how to box. I did about ring craft, but who could not "take it" as well. He won a 10-round decision, giving me one of the keenest setbacks in my career, but later that same year I stopped him in Round 7.

Shortly after my first set-to with Wenzel, arrangements went through for my special discharge from the navy. I sincerely liked the fleet but it would be impossible to remain in the service and get anywhere as a professional boxer.

QUITS NAVY

So I waved a fond farewell to active naval service and made my first really important match.

The announcement that I was going to box Floyd Johnston gave me a real thrill. The contest was billed for May, 1924.

I had ample time to prepare for my meeting with Johnson. Johnny Buckley, my manager, sent me to Wamesit, Mass., where Martin Flaherty, a featherweight star in the days of George Dixon, conducts a health farm.

When the day of battle arrived Floyd was a 10 to 3 favorite.

As I sat in my corner waiting for the bell to sound for the opening of the first round, I decided to spring a surprise attack on Johnson.

Clang! The old bell sounded. I bolted from my corner. I backed Johnson against the ropes and drove left and right hand punches to his body.

The referee finally pried us apart, and Johnson let drive a terrific right punch for the jaw. It it had scored it would have ripped my head from my shoulders. I was too fast, however, and got out of the way of the punch.

Johnson let drive another right and again missed. As he planned to release another right, I stepped in quickly and drove a hard right to Floyd's jaw.

DEFEATS JOHNSON

Johnson's eyes became glassy, his knees sagged and he plunged in a heap to the canvas.

Meanwhile the referee started his count. At the count of four Johnson started shaking his head vigorously in an effort to clear his muddled brain.

At right he started to get up and just before the full count he reached his feet. I stepped in close and tried to finish him, but Floyd held on for dear life and managed to weather the storm.

The contest went the limit of 10 rounds and I easily won the decision.

I only weighed 181 pounds for the Johnson bout, which was 18 pounds lighter than I was when I left the navy.

I met Mrs. Sharkey shortly before the Johnson bout, and, as it was a case of love at first sight, we decided to get married.

MARRIAGE HELPS

I think those managers who oppose boxers under their direction getting married are wrong. Marriage gives one a real incentive in life. I am sure I would not have done so well in the boxing game if it had not been for the encourage ment and advice which I have received from Mrs. Sharkey.

(In tomorrow's articles Sharkey tells of his knockout at the hands of Romero Rojas and how he rose to stay down.)

Diamond Pick-Ups

Cedric Durst, the outfielder secured from the New York Yankees in the trade for Charlie Ruffing, is expected to make his first appearance as a Red Sox this afternoon.

He hasn't the greatest record in the world, having hit for only about .250 in New York the past two seasons, but he was never used regularly. He looked like a great fielder and a player who would hit .300 if used every day when he was with the St. Louis Browns. He throws and bats left-handed, is 30 years old and weighs 165 pounds

Huh fans regard the trade as a good one. Ruffing looks like a good pitcher. He has looked ever since breaking in with the Sox in 1924. But the fact remains that he never was here and since the Sox are badly in need of a right-fielder who can field as well as hit, the customers feel that Durst will be of more value to the team than Ruffing.

Big C. didn't win more than one fourth of his games while with the Sox. He was unlucky to a certain extent in past years, but this season he was legitimately beaten in every start.

Personally, he's a fine fellow and local fans will wish him well in his new job. They expect him to prove a winning pitcher for the Yanks, inasmuch as he will have to do much better than he usually did for the natives, to turn in many triumphs for his new mates.

"Bull" Durham was a star young man when the campaign opened. He contracted influenza in Columbus and was several pounds underweight and still suffering from the effects of the illness when the Sox reached Boston. He proved that he has entirely recovered by his great work in his first game by holding the White Sox hitless for four innings.

Tom Oliver made three hits in four trips to the platter in the 19th consecutive game in which he has hit safely. He now has 31 hits to his credit and is leading in the race for total hits honors, as well as being one of the leading batters, with an average of .373.

John Smith, new White Sox shortstop, was formerly a boxer. His muscle bound at present and ought to be quite a player when he is in shape, for he looks o.k. right now.

The White Sox have gone back to that old uniform of dark blue with plain white stockings. It is the best looking road outfit that has been seen at Fenway Park to date.

Mike Kelley, assistant to Donie Bush, never played in the big leagues. He grew up with the new White Sox pilot, and Donie being one who always thinks of his friends first, gave him the job. He isn't bad, either, having plenty of pep.

Cook Is Varsity Stroke at Tech

With Howard Richardson Technology stroke, ill with an attack of grippe, Technology's crew practice has been somewhat hampered. Fortunately there is no race this Saturday with an outside college. The Richards class cup races will take place Saturday. In the absence of Richardson, Phil Cook has been shifted from No. 6 to the stroke seat. Kloenne, who was taken out of the boat before the Princeton race, is now at No. 6.

GOOD GOLF

By CHESTER HORTON
"Golf's Greatest Teacher"

The reason you start your swing slowly is not that there is magic in a "slow back swing." So far from it indeed the [illegible] you [illegible] to keep [illegible] swing now [illegible] a lot of order to a golfing [illegible] explains why you have often wondered what that "slow back" swing business is all about when you see great players using it and not a one of them using such methods in his back swing. You start your back swing as easy, natural flow of action because only by so doing can you expect to be graceful in your action, and gracefulness is an absolutely essential in good swings. Grace fulness here means smoothness. Whatever pace you have seen back swinging so fast were, at the same time, smooth with their action as a whole—a fact which may have escaped you. You can be fast in your action up to the limit of your controllable smoothness and no faster. Now you will perceive that, if you think of yourself making perfect swings you doubtless will instinctively start from the ball slowly and naturally. Such a start leads directly into a nicely-paced action throughout.

Foreign Commerce Meeting May 15

Commissioner Conroy to Attend as Boston's Official Representative

Joseph A. Conry, traffic commissioner, has been delegated by Mayor Curley to represent the city at the meeting of the Foreign Commerce Club at the Elks Hotel May 15.

This will be one of the important meetings of the year, according to President Elmer E. Elwell. Entertainment will include motion pictures of the rescue of the crew of the Antinoe by the S. S. President Roosevelt.

Clarence Chamberlin's flight from the Leviathan to shore will also be shown on the screen. The WLOE Entertainers and guest artists will give a 20-minute program.

In keeping with the club policy, the address will require 20 minutes or less. Commissioner Conry is rated as an expert on traffic matters, and was one of the early boosters of the port.

Why the Safety Drive

We have been asked why we are so deeply concerned in promoting a safety campaign among hacks who ke.

Here's our reply.

Last year in Boston harbor more than 300 men were as severely injured that they lost a total of 25,850 days. Seven men were killed. When these figures are estimated in losses to insurance people and to higher rates, we approach the quarter million dollar mark for the 12 months ending in June.

We maintain that hundreds of these accidents were avoidable. For instance, four men lost in total nearly a years time because of poorly covered hatches. Shoe loads in motion injured 34 men causing them to lose 1982 days. Ten men were incapacitated for 959 days by sling loads in landing. Three men were not warned when objects were thrown, and so lost 55 days.

Welcome Back, Harry

Friends of Harry Joel, dock superintendent for Krauss Brothers Lumber Co., are greeting him on his return to work after about 8 years sick absence. Harry is feeling strong and is eager to get going. He was a city councilman here in Cambridge and formerly a member of the committee for the U. S. Shipping Board.

Rule No. 7

Capt. W. A. Hindon a safety code committee produced an excellent rule in regard to lighting. All docks in use at night and decks of ships must be fully illuminated. Ships' holds must be lighted, with guards erected from the men's eyes.

Longshoreman's Gazette

CARL MORRISON, Editor

Vol. 2 No. 6

The subject of our third article on "Who's Who in Boston Harbor" is George H. Toole.

George H. Toole

This import freight agent of Rogers & Webb someday hopes to be recognized as an attorney. Meanwhile, he is very accommodating to customers and the newspaper tribe.

George is just one of the dub class as a golfer and his profession is attending banquets with the editor of the Marine Guide.

In his spare hours George H. Toole writes for the Merchant Marine Bulletin and other publications. He was formerly with the White Star line and at sea with the United Fruit.

Among George's clubs are the Foreign Commerce Club and Propeller Club.

P. S. All joking aside, George is one of the very few shippers who are attorneys. He is in the Boston Bar Assn., the American Bar, Maritime Law Assn., the Massachusetts Bar and recently was admitted to practice before the Interstate Commerce Commission. He has handled some noteworthy cases involving seamen.

Bostonians Afloat

Arriving in New York on the White Star liner, Olympic, were Mr and Mrs. Richard C. Paine, of Boston.

On the Venezuela, of the Panama Mail Line, which arrived in New York yesterday from California and way points, were Mr. and Mrs Henry Bartlett, of Boston.

Bostonians now en route to Europe on the Leviathan are: David P. Edwards, Frank J. D. Barnum, Miss Eugenie Schaar, Dr. A. E. Hertz, George Holmes Dr. and Mrs. J. A. LePierre and Max Latik.

Significant Cargo

Harbor circles are "buzzing" because the Adriatic Underfeeder opened her hatches and discharged a good-sized Boston cargo. The load of barbed wire and other general items is said to be the first cargo of any size brought to Boston for a German passenger liner since the World War.

For Charlestown Readers

A few days ago the Gazette introduced a campaign for a special ambulance for the Charlestown waterfront, and posters were placed on newsstands announcing the story. As these said: "Read tonight's American," and were allowed to remain on display long after the papers were sold, several people are looking in each issue for the particular story.

Here are the facts for those who did not see our first item.

Harbor workers are awaiting notice from Mayor Curley granting them a conference to discuss assigning an ambulance similar, to those in East and South Boston, to Charlestown. The situation often is serious, especially when the regular police patrol is otherwise tied up and when some of the drawbridges are closed to land travel.

More Import Gains

Boston is three times as sweet as it was 10 years ago if import figures mean anything. Then the sugar imports amounted to 137,488 tons. Last year the figure had jumped to 329,310.

GARRETT CASE BEFORE GRAND JURY FRIDAY

Allen Bans Fishing Because of Fires

Milk, Water, Ice for Hot Days

Dolly Wins a New Job and Leaves

Bright-haired, vital, alive, young Anne Murdock had been three years at the Eaton Advertising Agency when her opportunity came—the opportunity to become Eaton's personal secretary. To work with a man of Lawrence Eaton's breadth and power was something to dream of, for Anne had ambitions beyond a suburban home with Ted O'Hara, who was on her own side of the ladder. Then the lovely beauty Anne Murdock saw in her own home was that of her sister, Kathleen, who had lately deserted that home for a career in the chorus. But Eaton overhears a conversation between his secretary and young O'Hara which leaves him wondering whether he may not have to surrender his efficient assistant to Cupid. Anne senses this and declares that she has no dreams whatever of matrimony. Eaton sends Anne on a business trip to Chicago. On her return she learns that Kathleen is planning on a runaway marriage.

CHAPTER 22

It was uncanny walking through the silent, dark streets. Anne met no one save a solitary policeman who looked at her curiously as she hurried by.

Presently she reached Kathleen's.

"You don't know what it is to be jealous," Dolly had told her.

Ah, did she not? Climbing the stairs, she thought of that hideously revealing moment in the bedroom at Hot Springs—then shut her mind to it.

Lola let her in. "What's up?" she exclaimed.

"I want to talk to Kathleen. Is she asleep?"

"I guess so. I just got my clothes off. What's wrong with you?"

"Nothing."

"If you've heard about Georgie," Lola advised her, "go easy. We've all tried to head her off. That kid's a mule. I hate to see her get mixed up with a potter like that," Lola went on, and Anne saw warning and sympathy under the patina of her years.

She went into the bedroom which Kathleen shared with one of the other girls, now out of town. Kathleen was sleeping with one arm flung up, the lovely face flushed and childlike.

Anne sat down on the bed and touched her gently. "Kathleen."

The girl turned, woke, blinked at Anne incredulously, and then sat up. She was thinner, thought Anne, harried-looking.

"For heaven's sake!"

Anne got up and closed the door and returning, sat down on the bed.

"I've been with Dolly Davis," she said. Kathleen colored.

"What has she been saying about me? I never liked her furiously.

"Never mind that. We've no time. Is it true that you are planning to run away with George——?" She stopped, realizing absurdly that she did not know the man's surname.

"If I am, what of it?" Kathleen challenged. "I can do as I like, can't I?"

"I suppose so. Where are you going?"

"To the Coast. He has a chance in a night club there. We are going to work up an act."

"Kathleen, listen to me. Do you expect him to marry you?"

"George doesn't believe in marriage." Kathleen told her defiantly. "He—he says it ruins personalities. He believes that a union bound only by love and respect," she went on glibly. Then she met Anne's eyes and her face fell. "But I think he'll marry me—after," she whispered.

Anne's heart leaped. "After." The implication was that it was not too late; that the hold this fatuous wretch had upon the girl was not the last, the strongest hold of all—not yet.

She said casually: "Dolly's expected for some time that he'd marry her."

Kathleen rose to the bait. "He doesn't give a snap of his fingers for her. He's just sorry for her." "So sorry for her that he allows her to buy his clothes, to share her apartment with him—to keep him, in fact?"

"That's a lie!" Kathleen's eyes were furious — and frightened. "I heard all that talk, most of it from her. He told me he was ill and broke and Dolly was crazy after him. He was grateful to her—as — as a son might have been," Kathleen explained ridiculously, "and she spoiled their friendship by falling in love with him—a woman old enough to be his mother!"

"He told you that? And you believed him? Kathleen, look at me!"

The girl did so, unwillingly.

"Have I ever lied to you?"

"No."

"I am not lying now. I have heard what you have heard, but I have seen what you are unwilling to see; his clothes in the apartment to which he has a latchkey; his finger marks on her arm. He misses her," Anne said; "he would go to any lengths for money."

"I don't believe it!"

"Yes, you do. You just won't face it. You must. I wouldn't ordinarily interfere in your love affairs — as you've said, your life is your own. But you can't throw yourself away on this worthless creature — this kept boy—this man who abuses women—

FORESTS ALL OVER N.E. BURNING

Governor Warns of Peril in the Proclamation Suspending Sport of the Anglers

Gov. Allen by proclamation today closed the fishing season because of the number of forest fires raging throughout the state.

At the same time Commissioner of Conservation William A. L. Baxley telegraphed Secretary of the Navy Adams requesting that cigarette smoking be banned in navy planes scheduled to arrive here tomorrow.

Word was received that the fire in the Olander Mountain section, which has devastated 25,000 acres in Massachusetts, New York and Connecticut, broke out with renewed fury today.

The Governor's proclamation reads:

"Because of the continued drouth and the greatly increased danger to the forests and woodlands of Massachusetts and the fact that the record of forest fires for this year to date is over acres burned over, with a damage of 2,000 fires with more than 40,000 which is impossible to estimate at the present time, and because at present there is an average of 100 fires daily, with every indication that this dry period will continue with high winds,—I hereby proclaim that under Chapter 249 of the Acts of 1925, any open season on fish, established by Chapters 130 and 131 of the General Laws of Massachusetts, shall be suspended at midnight tonight through the continuance of the present menace by fire to the woodlands of the Commonwealth and until a proclamation shall be made for the purpose of reopening the fishing season, at which time additional days will be added to the fishing season to take the place of those lost by the closing of the season under this proclamation."

Commissioner Baxley's telegram, read:

"On account of disastrous forest fire conditions in Massachusetts and other New England states, please issue strenuous orders against cigarette smoking in the Navy planes planning to arrive here tomorrow and during their stay in New England."

Announcement was made that all able bodied men seen on the way to fires will be pressed into service to fight them.

In Rhode Island, Commissioner of Agriculture Harry R. Lewis reported he expected all fires would be under control today, but Governor Trumbull of Connecticut warned that stringent emergency regulations might be necessary in that state.

At Stony Eagle Village near Hollis, Me., a $2,000,000-power station was threatened by a fire which has devastated more than 25 square miles of woodland in two days.

Coincident with the fishing ban drastic action will be taken against motorists who rush to fires impeding fire apparatus.

Automobilists guilty of throwing lighted cigars and cigarettes from vehicles on roads which border woodland will also be dealt with severely.

In addition to court penalties, license and registrations will be either suspended or revoked.

Under mother's umbrella, Phyllis Murrin found shade as yesterday's heat caused many a burning brow. Phyllis has her lunch at hand—a health swig of the best of milk which she thinks is the best diet.

It was 90 in the shade when this photo was made at Frog Pond on the Common, yesterday afternoon. Water was the selection of Kenneth Pasokarnis. (Staff photos.)

"Ice for me, and plenty of it," said Leah Gill, as the weather man told that the record for heat on any May 6th in Boston's weather history was broken. Take your pick, milk, water or ice. But above all—keep cool—don't get excited.

SPARKS START 2-ALARM FIRE

Sparks from an electric welding machine which ignited an acetylene gas tank, caused a two-alarm fire which swept the one-story brick garage and repair shop of John F. Gradell, 7 Channing pl., Jamaica Plain today.

Twelve automobiles and three trucks were partially destroyed by the flames, which caused a loss estimated at $10,000.

Several firemen of Engine 42 and Ladder 20, taking a line of hose into the burning garage, narrowly escaped injury when two acetylene tanks at the far end exploded.

Sheets of flame shot over the heads of the firemen, but they were not touched.

Trolley car traffic between Egleston sq. and Forest Hills was tied up. Gundell and two other men escaped from the garage but were unable to save any machines as rapidly did the flames lick through the building.

WALTHAM MAN WINS $4700

Four months ago a chance acquaintance pestered Leo Rivers, 21, of Crescent st., Waltham, until he finally bought a ticket in a foreign lottery. It cost him $1.23.

Today he was notified that he had won $4700.

Rivers had forgotten all about the lottery in the meantime. The same acquaintance who sold him the ticket notified him of his victory.

Rivers, who works for a bakery, said he is engaged to Miss Margery Plummer of Hammond st., Waltham.

"After one big splurge I am going to settle down on the old farm in Benedicta, Me., where my mother, seven sisters and two brothers live," he declared.

Lucky Man

Here he is, Leo Rivers, Waltham baker, who was practically forced into buying a lottery ticket for $1.25. Leo was told today he had won $4700. (Staff photo.)

Reporter Honored by War Veterans

John J. Donovan, City Hall reporter for the Boston Globe, is proudly wearing a Veterans of Foreign Wars pin today, honorary membership having been conferred upon him last night by Lieut. Norman Prince post of Roxbury.

Donovan was with the Knights of Columbus overseas and accomplished the feat of putting the K of C on the Rhine five days ahead of any other American welfare organization.

No Hasty Arrests on "Bottle" Decision

No promiscuous arrests will be made here on the recent decision of the U. S. Supreme court that bottles, barrels, corks, labels and other paraphenalia for liquor may be seized, Johothan Lewis, prohibition administrator announced today.

Lewis said he was waiting for an official copy of the decision and its interpretation by Washington prohibition authorities.

Girl Leaps Two Stories

Irene Diggs, 18, leaped two stories to the ground from a window of a Columbus ave. house yesterday, escaping with a fractured ankle.

TERCENTENARY STAMPS READY

These may be affixed to envelopes and windshields and are for sale at 104 Hanover st. at $2 a thousand.

They are issued by the official Boston Tercentenary Committee and bear the official seal of Boston for the celebration, with the words, "Boston Calls You for 1930."

Ferry Captain's License Suspended

The pilot license of Capt. Alfred Carleton of the ferry Newtowne was suspended for five days today by the inspectors of steam vessels, following the crash on April 9 between the Newtowne and the navy launch Constance.

Capt. Carleton was found guilty of violating the pilotage rules, the board ruling that the Constance had the right of way and the Newtowne could have been maneuvered in a way to avoid the crash. Two sailors on the Constance leaped into the water following the crash.

FOLEY PLANS TO PRESENT FACTS ON PENSION

Confers With the Retirement Board Doctors and Will Talk With Bailey Later

Dist. Atty. Foley announced today he had held a two-hour conference with Doctors Foley and Fairbanks of the Boston retirement board, as a result of which he hopes to go before the grand jury Friday on the pensioning of Oliver B. Garrett.

Foley said he went over the records of the medical examination of Garrett held the first of this year, and was given many important details at first hand.

The district attorney planned to question Dr. Frederick J. Bailey of the city health department later.

Garrett's retirement on pension was based on a report made by Dr. Bailey, in which changes were made following a conference with former Police Commissioner Wilson.

The questioning of Dr. Bailey will clear up the political angle of the pension, Dist. Atty. Foley said.

Late today, he added, he expects to receive from the attorney general's office the data used in the investigation of Garrett. He will also confer with Atty. Gen. Warner and Atty. Damon F. Hall, who conducted the Garrett hearings.

CHARGES MALDEN DRUG STORES SELL LIQUOR TO SCHOOLBOYS

SWEEZEY TO HAVE $3000 DRY FUND

Tells Counsel Sample of Rum Sold to Youths Made His Finger Numb

Charging that liquor is being sold to high school boys in some of the drug stores of the city, Police Commissioner Artemas B. Sweezey of Malden today was granted his request for $3000 for liquor enforcement by the Common Council.

The grant was opposed by a few of the council, who expressed a dislike for a "spotter" campaign planned by Sweezey.

He told the council he knew of instances where high school boys made purchases of liquor and then delivered them to older men.

He said he tested a sample of the brand sold by placing his finger in a bottle, and caused a slip of muth in an otherwise fiery meeting when he said his finger was numb for an hour after.

$75,000 Verdict Wins Dancer for Art

Evelyn Ellsmore, Providence dancer, who was yesterday awarded a verdict of $75,000 damages in U. S. court for injuries suffered in a Boston theater, shown as she realizes her ambition to study art. The verdict, said to be the largest ever awarded in federal court in a personal injury suit, will permit her to take up her studies at once. (Staff photo.)

BROKEN-NECK DANCER MAY STUDY ART

Evelyn Ellsmore Plans to Use $75,000 Award in Vocational Training.

While her plans for the future are undecided, Miss Evelyn Ellsmore, pretty dancer who was awarded $75,000 as a result of a broken neck received in a stage fall, is considering taking up the study of commercial art.

She worked at it several years ago. If she finds that she still has her old skill she may develop her talent, as it offers her an occupation.

The only use she had made of her ability to design stage costumes recently has been for charitable organizations.

MONEY IS NOT ALL

"A million dollars wouldn't pay me for all that I have lost," said Miss Ellsmore, discussing the accident.

"I was studying to be a coloratura soprano, doing interpretive dancing.

"Now I have to be so careful every movement. The brace around my neck makes it difficult for me to speak at times. I want to get away from everything and have a rest."

Miss Ellsmore lives in Providence with her mother. She helped to support her when working and studying.

When a child she lived in Wellesley and Wimbiton. During those years she became a swimmer of endurance and was offered opportunities to enter national swimming meets.

VERY SHY GIRL

She is very shy, however, and always refused these opportunities. A swim of nine miles was a small matter for her.

The verdict of $75,000 secured for the dancer by her lawyer, Nathan Fink, is said to be one of the largest settlements for a single accident ever awarded in Massachusetts.

Until her plans for the future are settled, Miss Ellsmore will live with her mother.

Barred at the present time from leading the active life, she says she will not be satisfied until she has found some task in which she can become interested.

SUIT TIES UP ESTATE

Mary E. Cronin of Weymouth, widow of the late John F. Cronin of Raynham, and her sis ignter, Helen Routher of Weymouth, stipulated before Judge Elias R. Bishop in the equity motion division of superior court yesterday that they would not transfer any part of Cronin's estate until after the determination of a bill in equity brought by the heirs of Lizzie E. Pittsley, late of Raynham, the second wife of Cronin.

The plaintiffs are Frederick Stevenson of Boston, Harry A. Stevenson, Richard Coleman of Melrose, and Lillian Pharron of Melrose, heirs of Lizzie C. Pittsley.

It is alleged in the bill that on June 17, 1896, Cronin, who died last January 7, married Mary E. Levangie at Braintree that there is no known record of that marriage, and that they never lived together and were not known to have married until the marriage was established by a decree of the Bristol County Probate Court, April 14, 1930.

In 1900 it is claimed that Cronin and Lizzie C. Pittsley went through a marriage ceremony before Joseph R. Presho at Raynham. They lived together at Raynham as man and wife until she died in 1926 and that previous marriage of Cronin to Miss Levangie was concealed by him from his second wife.

Get Clues Tomorrow in Air Mystery

Yesterday's heat, combined with the excitement of searching the air for clues to the Mystery, brought collapse to the ship reporter sent forth to track down the latest rumors. However, just before passing out of the picture entirely, the brave lad was able to telephone the latest development to his editor — and here it is:

Tune in tomorrow on Station WHDH at the following times: 8.45 a. m., 12 noon and 6.45 p. m. and you will hear further details concerning the Mystery in the Air that will soon have all Greater Boston agog.

Now, if you have never been agog, you want to try it. Those of us who have been agog would not talk anything, for the experience, and when your agogness, as it were, may easily lead you to the end of the rainbow, then it is doubly pleasant.

Never was there a mystery so covered, shrouded, veiled, masked and completely "under cover," and you want to be sure to read these pages very carefully tomorrow for any reference to where, when and how you may unravel the mystery and obtain the cash awards.

The nice thing about it is that one does not have to be a Sherlock Holmes or a Philo Vance to get in the running. It is really all very simple, and the men, women, boys and girls who capture the prizes may, after all, be those who have never worn a set of false whiskers or read a detective story —so be on the lookout.

Strandway to Have Landings for Boats

Lomasney Support for Higgins Seen

Inclusion of Representative Higgins among the probable candidates for the Democratic congressional nomination in the 10th district is regarded in East Boston and Charlestown as an intimation that Congressman John J. Douglass, who is expected to seek re-election, will be deprived of the support of Martin M. Lomasney.

The quiet work being done for Higgins, who stands high in the council of the Hendricks Club, is believed to be preliminary to formal announcement of his candidacy.

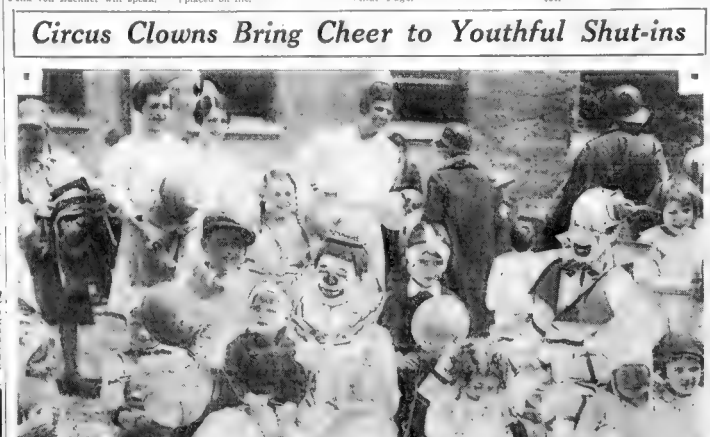
Circus Clowns Bring Cheer to Youthful Shut-ins



Faces long wrinkled in pain were wreathed in smiles when clowns from the Ringling Brothers and Barnum and Bailey Circus visited the Children's Hospital and opened their bag of tricks. Even the nurses responded to the mirth-provoking antics of Felix Adler and Alt La Rue, shown doing their stuff. (Staff photo.)

CIRCUS VISITS CRIPPLES

As its customary annual visit, the circus moved into the Children's Hospital for a brief spell, tickled the young shut-ins and made the advent of warm weather a living, breathing thing to hundreds of unfortunate boys and girls.

The balloons, the ice-cream and cake, the clowns, the elephant, and even the monkey, said "howdie" to the youngsters as part of the show presented by members of the Ringling Bros. and Barnum and Bailey Circus.

Felix Adler and his side-kick, Altemus La Rue, clowns par excellence, jumped through time-honored hoops, acrobated themselves over the expanse of green on the hospital grounds and ceased their antics only when laughter rendered the kiddies helpless.

Poor children who must lie outstretched in straight jackets; those whose imaginations take them into realms beyond white ceilings, relish such diversion if it is only fleeting.

The circus will keep the youngsters alive with gossip and happy for months. It's a profound experience in their lives.

CUP DEFENDER WHIRLWIND TAKES MAIDEN PLUNGE AT NEPONSET

SECOND BOAT OF FLEET IS AFLOAT

Mrs. Edwin Thorne, New York Woman, Sends the Trim Craft on Her Way

Sent on her way by the sponsoring hand of Mrs Edwin Thorne of New York, the trim cup defender Whirlwind slid down the ways at Lawley's shipyard, Neponset, today, the second of four defenders of America's cup against Sir Thomas Lipton's challenger, Shamrock V.

Mrs. Thorne is the mother of Langdon K. Thorne, who heads a syndicate of New York men, organized for the building of the entry.

With the settling of the craft in the waters of the Atlantic, the new craft perpetuated a name made famous in the clipper days, when the clipper ship Whirlwind, also owned by the Thorne family, startled the world with an 83-day trip between New York and Melbourne, Australia.

Planked with mahogany, the Whirlwind is a contrast to the Enterprise, already launched, and the Weetamoe and Yankee that will take to the briny this week. The other three are bronze plated. The Shamrock V is wooden planked.

That good luck is in the van and wake of the craft was predicted by hardy shipworkers who saw her take the water without the slightest mishap. She registers 158 tons gross and measures 127 feet overall, has an 86 foot waterline with a 21-foot beam and draws 15½ feet of water.

She was designed by L. Francis Herreshoff for the New York syndicate and will be sloop rigged when completed to carry 7500 square feet of sail.

Second Cup Defender Candidate Yacht Launched

Sponsored by Mrs. Edwin Thorne of New York, the cup defender candidate Whirlwind was launched today at Lawley's shipyard, Neponset. Staff photo shows her just before she slid from cradle. The Whirlwind is the second yacht launched of four candidates for the honor of defending the America cup against Sir Thomas Lipton's Shamrock V. The Reliance was launched recently and the Yankee will take to the water Saturday. The Whirlwind is named for an old time clipper ship of the Thorne family, famous for an 80-day voyage between New York and Australia. Mrs Edwin Thorne, sponsor of the Whirlwind and mother of Langdon K. Thorne, head of New York syndicate organized to built the craft for America cup defender honors against Sir Thomas Lipton's Shamrock V.

Yes, culture is on the ascendant. Business men are going in for books. We looked in on the new building of the Kirstein Memorial Library the other day. Brooms and dust pans were flying and soon it will be open. It is to be a branch of our public library devoted exclusively to the use of down town business men. It is on City Hall ave. back of Thompson's Spa, handy to everyone and everything. Mary Watkins Dutcheson is the librarian in charge. She comes from Minneapolis not precisely with a mission, but any way determined to make our business men book conscious. Of course there will be a liberal supply of all commercial tomes such as tax books, law books, financial rating books and what have you. But there will also be a well stocked shelf of economics and sociology. She says that every business executive ought to read Stuart Chase's "Men and Machines." She also recommends H. A. HUB 'EATS' WIN TACOMA CROWD

The "greatest kick" of the national tour the Tacoma Chamber of Commerce is making, was held today in Boston by hearing "ardent and intellectual" Bostonians [illegible] the "gang song."

At least that's what President Fred C. Brewer said at the breakfast given to his party at the Copley-Plaza by Mayor Curley.

"Why," exclaimed Mr. Brewer, "you Bostonians are actually human, as seen by singing that 'Hail, the Gang's All Here'"

Another occurrence which impressed the 35 visitors was having Boston baked beans for breakfast.

"I never before had a breakfast like it, and I'll bet you Bostonians never did either," Mr. Brewer commented amid laughter.

After the breakfast, the party toured the city. In welcoming the visitors, Mayor Curley praised the recreational and industrial advantages of Boston.

"New England," said the mayor, "is the most ideal spot in the world for a vacation, except, of course, Tacoma."

FILM WORK TO START SOON

By LOUELLA O. PARSONS
Motion Picture Editor, Universal Service

Copyright, 1930, by Universal Service

LOS ANGELES, May 7.—Frank Fay just seems destined to have his red hair dyed black. "Under a Texas Moon" made such a hit with the Fay public, that Frank has been taken out of "Captain Applejack" and put into a sequel to "Under a Texas Moon," with, of course, raven locks. That was an immediate decision reached only yesterday.

Studio things that way. Almost as suddenly as Frank was put into "Under a Texas Moon," almost that quickly, Jack Halliday was given Fay's part in "Captain Applejack," which Wallace Eddinger created on the stage. Mary Brian has been borrowed from Paramount for the Mary Nash role.

And Hobart Henley, who came here from New York in telling the still new Monday for work on "Capt. Applejack" is now fast in the throes of NOTHING ESCAPES the watchful eye of producers these days. Paul Gerdions looking for an idea for Tiffany ambushed Emory Johnson one time director of "Hell Harbor" and engaged him to do a sound version of "The Tell-A-Vision." That's the story of the picture, Johnson, remember, had quite a spell of glorifying uniforms. Policemen, postmen, etc. Wonder if he will bring all his old movies back with sound. I'll wager the fireman and mail will have plenty of noise. Tiffany, someone tells me, will enter into another agreement with the Gainsborough Films to film an English classic. "Journey's End" was made that way and as you will admit, is a successful venture.

PARAMOUNT'S GRETA GARBO Marlene Dietrich, is being groomed to play in a drama now being written for her by Martin Brown, Mr. Brown, the author of "The Lady," one of Norma Talmadge's most successful screen plays, is writing his story with Miss Dietrich's screen possibilities in mind. In case you may have forgotten, she is the German girl brought to this country by Mr. and Mrs. Josef Von Sternberg. Joe saw her in Berlin and signed her right away. Well, she will have to be good. Is all I can say, to come anywhere near equalling the Garbo, who, right or wrong, is still so popular her pictures good or bad, click at the box office.

I SEEM UNWITTINGLY to have done young Lyon Gannon an injustice. I have credited Junior Durkin with playing the part in Courage that Gannon had in the screen version of the boy hadn't done such a good job maybe it wouldn't have made so much difference, but they tell me he is so good in the part that Warners have signed him on a four-year contract with the intention of making a big star of him. Jannev's first picture will be "Old English with George Arliss and from the description it sounds like a mighty good part. We have so few children in the talkies these days that it is interesting to hear of a small boy who has made good.

'WHITE CARGO' MYSTERY

Who is Gypsy Rhouma? Is she the daughter of a very wealthy American who is hiding her real identity under an assumed name because her family objects to her being a stage and screen star? Why does she persist in keeping her real name and family connections a secret even to her most intimate friends?

These are the questions repeatedly asked of the beautiful girl who plays the role of Tondeleyo in the all talking picture "White Cargo" now at the Park.

At this moment Miss Rhouma is appearing as a dancer in the more fashionable of the Parisian cabarets, having just returned to the French capital after a tour of the other European centers. She is vivacious, frank, friendly and carefree, but readily admits that Gypsy Rhouma is not her correct name, that she was born in America, that she refuses to talk of her past. Outside of these facts her circle of friends know nothing about her except that for a number of years she has been prominent in American and European theatrical affairs, and that she has refused the hand of at least two members of European nobility.

JOAN PEERS IS SIGNED

On the alert to place under contract stars who show great box-office possibilities, Columbia has added the name of Joan Peers to its list of players by signing her for a long term. Miss Peers is considered one of the finds of the past year. Although Miss Peers has been on the stage since childhood, with a break of a few years during which she received a liberal education she entered the screen world practically unknown. It was while Miss Peers was playing her first New York role since her return to the stage that New York agents of Paramount discovered her as a possibility for the role of Helen Morgan's daughter in "Applause." When the production was given its world premiere in New York every critic singled out Miss Peers for special mention and declared that she stole the picture from Helen Morgan. In one night, the unknown Joan Peers was made and became a popular screen personality.

Her screen triumph was her second appearance before the public, the fact that Miss Peers is one of the rare exceptions of a popular child actress who is able to make good in later life. Most of them fall into obscurity at adolescence and are never heard of again; but Miss Peers, who is the daughter of Frank O. Peers, former opera singer was a famous child player, appearing with Guy Bates Post in "The Masquerader" and also in "Madame Butterfly" and "Trouble," before retiring from the footlights to complete her education. Upon graduating from school she understudied for Sylvia Sydney in "Crime," entered stock and later played the ingenue lead in "Compromise Marriage." Her first Broadway success was in "Marry the Man," from which she went into film.

In addition to "Applause," Miss Peers won added laurels with Moran and Mack in "Two Black Crows." She will be cast in a forthcoming production on the Columbia lot and start work within the next two weeks.

MRS. STONE HAS MANY DUTIES

By ALLENE CRATER STONE
In "Ripples," at the Colonial
(Wife of Fred Stone)

While most housewives, or more accurately, "home makers," according to the census enumerators' tabulation of those who are engaged in the business of running a home, generally find sufficient duties to keep them busy every waking moment, the theatrical housewife is fully as occupied.

It may be that I have coined the term "theatrical housewife." Truly, I've never heard it before, but it is also a matter of fact that I have never heard of any other mother in the theatrical business so situated as I am. With three stars in the household and also playing a role in the same company.

Not that I claim that in any manner my burden is irksome. Of course, life is ever so much more pleasant when the company is playing in New York, because our home at Forrest Hills, L. I., Long Island, is easily accessible, and we are able to go back and forth to the theater in the city each day.

On tour we must have recourse to hotels for our family life. That means that there is no household to direct, but does mean that there are many duties to perform. With two lively daughters, you can rest assured I am busy every minute. On matinee days and every evening we four Stones have a "round-up" in order to get to the theater in plenty of time. And then our other daughter, Carol, still too young to think of going on the stage, is entitled to a little attention.

I have no household budget to keep up—not the accepted kind, but as a housewife I am a very busy woman, and what more does a housewife expect?

KEEPS CAST ON TOES

How hard it is to play "straight man" opposite a comedian of the Thomas Mitchell order, who varies his performance from night to night almost every night, is the best story Fleming Ward has to tell nowadays. Mr. Ward is playing as the hero's lawyer and pal in the "Little Accident" comedy which has been running at the Plymouth for more than two months, and may stay for two months more. The success has been just like that.

"There are no radical changes, of course, in the night hurt the play. But it appears that Mr. Mitchell saves himself from going stale in the bachelor father role by improvising now and then. Some of these improvisations have proved so effective that they have been retained.

"It is helpful to be playing with a star who varies his performance," says Mr. Ward, "for this keeps you constantly on the alert. You must be on your toes every minute, ready for any sudden whimsy on Mr. Mitchell's part—a change of 'business' or some interpolated line, requiring quick and apt reaction on the part of the player opposite the star. But these are the little twists that keep the performance spirited and the players just as keen now as they were a year or a year and a half ago."

Sunday Series

The course of six Sunday afternoon concerts in Symphony Hall will be repeated next year. The following artists are announced: Jascha Heifetz, violin; Walter Gieseking, piano; Florence Austral, soprano; Roland Hayes, tenor; John Charles Thomas, baritone; Yeli D'Aranyi, violin, and Pauline Danforth, piano. The series will open on November 23.

ADLER FAMILY TO RETURN

The Boston debut of the entire family of the late Jacob P. Adler proved such a success at the Franklin Square Theater, where they appeared together for the first time in one play, that another engagement has been arranged this time, however, the noted Yiddish theatrical troupe will be seen at the Grand Opera House, for many years the home of Jewish drama, which is to be reopened again this season, specially for this attraction.

Luther Adler

The Adlers will again appear in "The Wild Man," Jacob Gordin's immortal Jewish dramatic classic, which will be given both on next Saturday matinee and evening. The cast, of course, consisting only of the wife and children of Jacob P. Adler, and includes among them, Mrs. Sarah Adler, her three daughters, Frances, Stella and Julia; her four sons, Adolph, Charles, Irving, Luther and her son-in-law, Joseph Shoengold, who is not only the director of the company, but one of its featured members.

Movie Bookers Plan Annual Dance Friday

The Movie Bookers of New England will run their fourth annual dansant next Friday at the Copley-Plaza. The proceeds of the dance are used for charity. A great many such cases have been helped during the past four years.

The committees are as follows: Emma V. Corbett, chairman; Edna Grovo, treasurer; Nell McLaughlin, secretary; dance committee, Phil Fox, Edna Grovo; entertainment committee Jack Gubbins, John Howard, M. Goldstein, Phil Fox; ad committee, A. Barry, Bill Coudy, M. Goldstein, John Moore, Sam Berg; program committee, Edward Urschie, chairman; Harry Smith, Florence Dubin, Sadie Gotz, Nell McLaughlin.

PARAMOUNT STARS CROWD FILM

Clara Bow might have been a stenographer. She took a secretarial course in a Brooklyn, N. Y., high school before a beauty contest started her on her starring film career.

Gary Cooper might have been a cartoonist. He studied for that profession but shifted to motion pictures.

Ruth Chatterton might not have accepted the dare that started her on a stage career, and Maurice Chevalier could have been a factory foreman. He helped support his mother when he was 11 years old by working in a factory.

Nancy Carroll might still be doing high kicks in the front row of a chorus. Charles (Buddy) Rogers might have been a trombone player in an orchestra. He worked his way through college in this manner.

George Bancroft just missed being a naval officer. He attended the United States naval academy. Helen Kane might have lost her baby voice when she grew up—but she didn't. Mary Brian had ambitions to paint when she first went to Hollywood.

Such are the "might-have-beens" of only a few of Hollywood's outstanding personalities. Each of them had something the public wanted. And each of them was found out by the keen eyes of Hollywood to shine on the screen.

Now Paramount has gathered together all these stars in its studio into one great musical-comedy extravaganza, "Paramount on Parade," now at the Washington St. Olympia and Uptown. Here all the great personalities of the Paramount roster, placed side, by side, show just why they are what they are, and are not what they might have been.

GALA OPENING FOR 'DRACULA'

The opening performance of "Dracula" at the Hollis next Monday will be a gala one through having the sponsorship of three of the most popular of local theater dignitaries. Manager Joseph P. Cook, Vincent Featherston and Paul Spillane of the Hollis executive staff.

Once a year these gentlemen tell their friends that a certain date will be the acceptable time to come to their party. They are the hosts in the playhouse where all the rest of the season they serve. And, like the "landlord's dinner" of a past-and-gone yet glorious day, it is spread that sends the partakers home lauding the day and the deed.

FAVORITES IN B. F. KEITH'S FILM

The newest but already one of the most popular of romantic "teams" in motion pictures will be at the new B. F. Keith's next Saturday in the all-color picture "Song of the Flame." Alexander Gray and Bernice Claire first met as singers in the operetta "The Desert Song," the former as leading man and the latter as an understudy who made good when the star was put out by illness.

They joined First National at almost the same time, and were paired in "No, No, Nanette." This was so successful that both were given long term contracts, and another important featured picture, "Spring Is Here."

"Song of the Flame" is Gray's fourth picture and Miss Claire's third, and they are already seasoned film actors. Noah Beery, Alice Gentle, Inez Courtney and Bert Roach are others in the cast of the big picture, which Alan Crosland directed.

The story is basically a simple love tale wherein war upsets the normal relationship between a Polish prince and a peasant girl. It is complicated considerably by the topsy-turvy chaos following the Russian revolution, with Beery as a Communist leader and Miss Gentle as his consort.

The story is staged against the colorful background of the Russian Revolution, with thousands of real Russians in the mobs, scenes of fighting in barricaded streets, pillage, looting and debauch. "Song of the Flame" produces massive sets accurately reproducing parts of Moscow, Petrograd and other Russian cities.

ESSEX POPULAR IN BUSINESS

"Many firms requiring several cars for transportation for their salesmen are investigating the Essex car," says C. L. Nutter, general manager of the Henley-Kimball Co., Hudson-Essex distributors. "The low upkeep of these cars together with their small depreciation makes them a most attractive business proposition.

"Large fleet users of Essex cars have found them very economical from every standpoint and repeat orders from year to year indicate most satisfactory results," he says.

"Being moderate in price keeps the investment small, and with reliable service stations in every city and town of any size in New England the salesman is assured of service at any time while in the field.

"We have recently delivered a fleet of 16 Essex cars to the General Electric Co. for the use of their salesmen. These cars will travel approximately 20,000 miles during the balance of the year."

Sees Big Year for Motor Coach Sales

Motor coach and bus sales in the United States during 1930 promise to show substantial increases according to A. H. Phones 4000 Miles for Stutz Autos

Indianapolis, Ind., May 7—Telephone communication between the Americas was put to commercial use by Luis Angel Firpo, one-time aspirant to Jack Dempsey's pugilistic crown, and now South American's leading Stutz dealer. J. J. Marshall, export manager of Stutz, has notified Col. E. S. Gorrell, president of that organization, that Firpo wanted 10 Stutz cars shipped immediately, and as casually as he would place a local call in Buenos Aires, he phoned the order to Mr. Marshall in New York 4900 miles away.

FOX HAS NOVEL SERVICE TRUCK

Merchants desiring delivery transportation expressive of the character of their business will be interested in the new Chevrolet Six Delivery Truck put in service this week for the I. J. Fox Company, furriers.

The "Home of the Fox Fur Trappers," a real log cabin such as might be the home of trappers in the north country, has been mounted on a Chevrolet Six chassis.

A replica of a fox surmounts the roof of the cabin. The trapper home is made more realistic by the pelts hung to dry and cure on the sides of the cabin.

In addition to furnishing practical delivery service, the design of the new truck ties in with the theme of the Fox Co.'s advertising and has attracted much favorable comment from the public, according to D. Lilienthal, manager.

The I. J. Fox Company plans to adopt the same body design for use by their stores throughout the East.

Auto Clubs Plan Aviation Service

With more airplanes now flown by civilians than were automobiles in use in 1900, nearly 200 American Automobile Association clubs are now providing "aviation service" for its members. This includes the distribution of airway maps, arranging for air transportation and an extensive general program to promote flying.

25 States Exempt Aids From Gas Tax

Twenty-five states in the Union have granted exemption to employes of the federal government of the state tax on gasoline upon showing that the employes are purchasing the fuel for use in conducting official business.

Trappers' Home on Wheels for Fox

Of Course Sixes Beat Fours

But in the ESSEX Challenger

you get a Super-Six

Its patented Super-Six principle gives the New Essex Challenger easy dominance over conventional Sixes. Look at the records. More than 5,000 New Essex Challengers set them. They represent local, national and world records in a great many cases. They show what any New Essex Challenger can do. No "Six" ever proved such all-around Performance, Reliability and Economy.

More Important Still Essex Keeps Its Nearness for Years

In this you will appreciate the Super-Six principle. Years of driving do not make this Essex old. The pep, economy and smartness are still there. And they are there to stay.

The secret is that Essex is free from vibration. It remains tight, free from squeaks and rattles. And it saves driver and car from nerve-pounding discomforts.

Its modern, balanced design accounts for this. It includes the SuperSix principle, balanced aluminum pistons, balanced power line, from crankshaft to rear end, and the Lanchester balancer for smoothness.

Big and Roomy, Too

The new Essex Challenger is big and roomy with ample interiors and greater comfort. Beautiful interior appointments carry out the fineness and distinction of this car.

Everyone knows Sixes beat Fours. Every owner knows that a Super-Six as decisively beats the conventional Six.

The Lusitania was torpedoed and sunk by a German submarine off the coast of Ireland, May 7, 1915. Many noted men and women were among the 1134 persons who lost their lives. This was one of the last straws which led to a declaration of war with Germany.

An Authority on Problems of Love and Marriage

"Perhaps I'll marry Kid, my girl friend," writes an 18-year-old correspondent, discussing his own future. "Just to make Kid happy. Or perhaps I'll land some peach of a job. Or perhaps I'll wander around for a while.

Beatrice Fairfax

"You see, what my parents want is to put me through a couple of years of college or training school. But I don't want people to keep on teaching me things. I want to be myself. Don't you think I'm right, Miss Fairfax, in not letting them put any more education over on me?"

This young man signs himself "Student of Life."

I have quoted from his letter because it says just what hundreds of young people, but particularly boys are always saying.

And the truth is that they are all wrong. There may be a boy in a thousand who is justified in taking this position. One who has so much brain and energy and good sense and so clear an idea of what he wants to do in the world that he can be his own teacher.

But in all the other cases, this precaution pose is a tragic mistake.

Think of it for a moment from the point of view of "Kid," that very young girl who is in love with "Student of Life." Suppose she was allowed to marry him, as he carelessly suggests. What sort of husband could he make now, this untrained boy with so good an opinion of himself? What could he offer the poor child but a life of makeshift and misery?

But if they wait five years, they can learn how to live and how to work and can be ready to tackle marriage intelligently.

I don't mean, of course, that "Student of Life" needs to go on studying from books, if he prefers not to. Let him learn a trade that will give him both an interest and a livelihood. Learn to make something and make it well.

It goes without saying that any 18-year-old whose parents are able to finance him while he learns a good trade or perhaps studies for a profession is very much in luck. But if the family purse is unequal to the demand, many a healthy and energetic boy, by working in his off-hours, can finance himself.

These years of the late teens are precious years, my young friends remind me. True. But what do you propose doing with them? Rush into some much-too-early marriage that may fall to pieces later on? Tie yourselves up to jobs that haven't any kick in them and won't lead anywhere and don't pay much, but are the best you can get, when you haven't been trained for anything in particular?

Freedom is carried rather far nowadays in certain directions. We used to think, and most people still think, that even if babies could talk it wouldn't be necessary to consult them about what they eat. That the only way to keep them well and promote their growth is to place the right quantity of cereal or carrots on a plate and see that it is eaten.

But not long ago, in Chicago, some doctors conducted a prolonged experiment with hospital babies. Several times a day a great many kinds of food were placed within these babies' reach, the babies were allowed to choose freely and to eat as much or as little as they chose. To drink no milk if they didn't want milk, or to eat six eggs if eggs looked enticing.

I believe they all survived.

But probably no mother read about these remarkable infant banquets without shuddering.

That is because mothers realize more intimately than the rest of us what a helpless creature the human baby is, and how slowly it develops.

They know that at the age of a year, for instance, there is practically nothing a baby is capable of deciding for itself.

And the queer thing is, as older mothers know, that even at 18 this grown-up baby isn't always able to make wise decisions.

So that it is safe to say that the 18-year-old who doesn't want to learn more than he already knows is still at the stage when some things must be decided for him.

SMART SAYINGS OF CLEVER CHILDREN

The Boston Evening American will pay $1 for published smart sayings. Address "Smart Sayings," Boston Evening American.

One day Mary, age six, went to see her aunt in the country. Mary never had seen chickens, and so her aunt told her to go out in the yard to see the chickens. She went out in the yard and saw a peacock, then ran into the house and said "Auntie, one of your chickens is in bloom."

The Misfits -:- -:- -:- Drawn by Nell Brinkley

We don't fit. We don't fit really at all, in any way. In Glorietta's new scheme of life or decoration. The furniture is too little for my ensemble, for my style, and the new scheme of things is too little for my soul. And ole Dan's. He is an incurable rectionary as to surroundings his romantic spirit can thrive in. He had the whole hills of Greece to roam in, things as old-fashioned as the sea, and trees and grass and flowers around him, in his youth, you know. Same with me.

These chairs cramp my legs. And the books that she gives me to read cramp my mind. And the new airs of my little wife herself cramp my merry and colonial-ma hogany soul.

For my gracious Glorietta has gone modern intense. My life, my house, my amusements my reading matter the walls that round me never a prison made before, are making it so, by George. I cannot breathe!

Our furniture is made by Jean Jacques Pierre Armand Lurgneux, Paris. Our house is planned by Hans Uffer garienhof Stuttweisen of Germany. Our kitchen comes they say, from Rotterdam. Our living room from the p brush and burning paper of "the Village light her New York.

And Glorietta waves a snooty little paw in our direction and says we are lucky that she hasn't wanted to build our house like the new captain's bridge effects that would find abroad! That we've got any pictures left on the wall at all! That our balcony isn't a hurricane deck affair and our rooms all round.

Cupid and I are out. Misfits. Les Miserables

EVENING AMERICAN MARKETS

STOCK MARKET TRENDS MIXED, BUT ORDERLY

New York, May 7—Price trends were mixed on the New York Stock Exchange today with trading decidedly more orderly and than in recent sessions.

Some of the best gains of the day included American Water Works and Chesapeake & Ohio, up 5 or better. Ingersoll-Rand, up 10; Worthington Pump, up 7; Westinghouse Electric and Columbus Carbon, up 4 or more, and American Can, up 3.

A drop in U. S. Steel to below 260 and the break in Celotex proved disturbing and the general list began to sag in the last few minutes of trading. The close was with a heavy tone. U. S. Steel fell 11 and the rise in Eastman was canceled.

MANHATTAN LOSERS

Manhattan Electric Supply trading in which has been stagnant for several days and which is reported under investigation, was a spot, tumbling over 34 to 13. This break failed to prove an unsettling factor.

After moderate extension of yesterday's gains at the opening, the market was subjected to heavy profit taking encouraging moderate resumption of short selling, during the morning.

Prices stiffened after the realizing was absorbed, and speculation for the rise was renewed with [illegible] Monday only to run [illegible] ing and short selling as trading progressed.

The [illegible] generally absorbed and far from [illegible] session's best prices.

The rally [illegible] after the beginning of [illegible] reflecting last week's reduction of the New York [illegible] rate. These had been some hesitancy about [illegible] 3 per cent renewal rate for call loans. It was feared this might prompt [illegible] withdrawal of funds in interior where reserve requirements are higher.

Funds were in abundant today, however, that the 3½ per cent renewal rate could not be justified, and after renewals at 3, funds were abundantly offered in the outside market at 2½.

The weekly steel trade reviews reported that signs of a stiffening of steel prices were apparent, and in consequence steel shares were subjected to flurries of liquidation from Age's weekly survey said.

BUYING CAUTION S.

"Buying remains exceedingly cautious and there is room for further slight curtailment, with ingot output for the country assuming 77 per cent as compared with 78 per cent last week."

Freight car loadings as reported for the week ended April 26, showed an increase of 14,293 cars from the previous week but were 111,513 under the same week of 1929, and lowest for the period in six years.

Speculative sentiment appeared to have improved considerably with the major market reaction apparently completed. Brokers are, however, stressed the possibility of a substantial secondary reaction developing during the next few days.

Reports to banking institutions generally are said to indicate that May earnings will show some improvement over April, and the second quarter appears to be making fair progress in business recovery, but speculative optimism is somewhat qualified as second quarter earnings are likely to be far below the same period of last year, when new highs were being made. It is pointed out that comparison with such an abnormal period as the second quarter of 1929 is unfair, by justification but nevertheless likely to have adverse psychological effects.

During the midday rally, such shares as Eastman Kodak, Loew's and United Aircraft moved up 3 points, but these gains generally failed to hold.

Of the steel shares U. S. Steel, Colorado Fuel, Vanadium, A. M. Byers and Crucible all showed losses, the last named touching a new low for the year.

American Tobacco B and I. I. Case, spectacularly buoyant yesterday, lost about 8 and 8 points during the morning. Mack Truck and Canada Dry dropped to new low levels, reflecting unfavorable earnings statements for the first quarter. Electric Auto Lite sagged a few points, despite a favorable review of the company's position by its president.

Celotex Co. common stock broke over 20 points to $21.50 a share on the New York Stock Exchange today on reports that the receivership had been filed in the chancery court at Wilmington, Del.

The stock dropped abruptly on the offer of a few thousand shares, losing 7 points between sales. Earlier in the year Celotex sold at $80 a share.

Auto Sales Corp.

Auto Sales Corp. reports for quarter ended March 31 net loss of $94,300 after charges and non-recurring charges of $22,083 and interest.

Steamships' Merger Move Is Dropped, Says Lapham

New York, May 7 (AP)—R. D. Lapham, president of the American Hawaiian Steamship Company, announced that negotiations for consolidation of his company with the Dollar Lines have been definitely discontinued.

WAIT A WHILE

V. N., Boston—I have sufficient cash to buy 35 shares American Radiator. Do you approve?

Ans.—Apparently, you have only $1200. That sum is not too much for a savings bank account. There is nothing better than ready cash in an emergency. However, American Radiator & Standard Sanitary, formed in May, 1929, is a leader in its line. Both have shown stability of earnings. For year ended Dec. 31, 1929, net profits equaled $2.45 per share. No direct comparison is possible. Dividends of 5% cents a share quarterly have been distributed since June, 1928. Don't commence to buy securities until you have $3000 or so.

SAVES $4000

New England Fuel & Transportation Co., also a wholly owned subsidiary, owns and operates a by-product coke plant, sells all its available gas production under contract to three utility companies, markets its coke on a large scale to industrial and domestic consumers and furnishes substantial amounts of coke required in the operation of its own properties. Tar and other products also are sold under advantageous contracts.

GOOD MACHINES ARE NEEDED IN INDUSTRY

By FRANK H. MELOON

Col. Benjamin A. Franklin, president of Associated Industries of Massachusetts, points out that up to date machinery is an outstanding industrial need of the times. He tells us that 44 per cent of our factory equipment is said to be over 10 years old. To be a decade old, in the face of advancing days of modern invention, he declares, is to be mostly on the superannuated list.

"Industry cannot use successfully the 'old boss' principle," says president Franklin, "because it is in the race horse period of production."

When attention was first called in this column to the Diesel engine, Packard's was in the experimental stage. Later rumors were circulated that automobiles would before long be generally operated with Diesels. While this has not proved true, it can be noted that President Macauley's last statement regarding Packard's Diesel did not deny that practical adaptation of this engine to automobiles was out of the question.

• • • •

With several Diesel locomotives already on the rails, where they are no novelty, the prediction is being made in big locomotive shop centers that the Diesel engine is due to displace both steam and electric before many years in American carrier operations.

• • • •

President Stephen Birch of the Kennecott Copper Corp. sounds a cheering note when he assures stockholders that uses of copper are not going out of fashion. He adds the new uses are at the time being found for the red metal.

• • • •

The old days when Boston was the primary market for the world's copper shares are indeed dead. We are frankly pleased to be assured. The Boston market for the coppers, however, is by no means at rest, except at times when note, for example, that Quincy Mining has been one of the five active issues on the Boston Stock Exchange nearly every day for many weeks, and was a leader in the late mild yesterday.

• • • •

Tobacco growers in western Massachusetts and the Connecticut Valley are already engaging workers for the fall harvest. This seems to be taking time by the forelock.

• • • •

One reason for the phenomenal rise of $39 a share by J. I. Case Threshing on the "big board" yesterday is not hard to find. In the face of sharp declines in prices of farm products, heavy grain reserves and several unfavorable factors, the agricultural machinery industry has thus far in 1930 fared exceptionally well, according to a current survey by the Standard Statistics Co., of New York.

"Indications are that the initial three months of this year constituted the best first quarter in the experience of the farm machinery trade, and that second quarter earnings will be sufficient to bring results for the entire opening half year to a level comparing favorably with the 1929 record. Intensive sales effort, the possibility of large crop yields and the rising trend toward mechanization of the farm throughout the world are the principal trade stimulating influences," says the bulletin.

• • • •

"Passing on to a consideration of possibilities for the full year, many tangible factors make definite forecast difficult. Thus, steadily declining grain prices, and the possibility of further large carryovers of grain this year and of crop failure incline to blur the picture. However, viewed on the basis of current data, we feel that the industry's total 1930 sales and earnings should make a fair comparison with those of 1929."

Senate Should Not Be Stampeded Into Hasty Action on Naval Treaty

In striking contrast with the precipitate action of the administration at Washington in dealing with the London naval parley treaty is the more deliberate course mapped out at Tokio.

Washington has rushed the treaty to the Senate in the closing days of a session overburdened with other business. No independent study of the treaty has been made by the naval authorities.

And the hearings the Senate has ordered, at which naval authorities will appear as witnesses, are prompted by the will of the Senate rather than the wish of the administration.

But they are ordering things differently at Tokio. Although Japan's copy of the treaty is due there next week, it will not even be submitted to the Privy Council before the latter part of June, or the first of July.

Thence it goes to the council's examination committee for careful study. And a Tokio dispatch says that final action upon the treaty is not expected before September.

If Japan can afford to take plenty of time to study every article of this treaty and get the untrammeled opinion of its naval authorities regarding the effect of the treaty upon Japanese security, surely the United States cannot afford to be less deliberate.

Then, too, the experience of this country with the treaties negotiated at the Washington conference is a strong argument against hot haste in disposing of the London treaty.

The Harding administration rushed the Washington treaties through to ratification within two months after the Washington conference adjourned. Because that administration wished to make political capital out of those treaties in the ensuing Congressional elections.

But the Washington treaties did not take effect for a long time thereafter because other signatory powers took plenty of time to examine them.

It was not until 18 months after the adjournment of the Washington conference that the five-power naval treaty went into effect.

It was not until 42 months after the conference adjourned that the nine-power open-door treaty went into effect.

And the Washington submarine treaty never was completely ratified, and therefore remained, as the Navy League of the United States points out, only "a futile gesture."

Instead of permitting the London naval treaty to be rushed to ratification before the present session of Congress adjourns, the United States Senate should refuse to be stampeded in this vital business.

Ample time should be allowed by the Senate for the treaty to be studied by our naval authorities, and for these authorities to give the results of their studies to both the committee on foreign relations and the committee on naval affairs.

Then, in the light of all the information developed by expert studies and committee hearings, the Senate should proceed deliberately to an honest, fearless and patient discussion of the treaty before taking a vote upon its ratification.

The end of a session of Congress and the eve of the hot season in the Federal City is no time to give a treaty vitally affecting the American navy the consideration due such an important engagement.

The greatest deliberative body in the world ought to do a little deliberating on a matter which is so important to the peace and safety of the nation as the London naval treaty.

The commitments of this treaty are far too vital to the future of the United States to be entered into lightly, hastily, and thoughtlessly.

Forest Fire Perils

With one city swept by flames, suffering a damage which will be difficult to repair, and with the countryside threatened by forest fires, the people of New England should scarcely need to be reminded of the necessity of exercising every precaution.

The forests can truly be said to be the core of a State.

Without them our rivers would be turbulent, dangerous sources of destruction. Our mill wheels would be idle, our factories abandoned, our cities dark.

Man has heedlessly and shamelessly defiled this precious gift of nature.

Massachusetts, as an example, was almost utterly without a progressive system of forest conservation until the ruinous hand of man had threatened the complete extinction of her forests.

The wreckage which was all but totally successful by design should not now be completed by shear carelessness.

A man would exercise ordinary care not to mar or disfigure a work of art in a gallery. How much greater his obligation to conserve the marvellous work of Nature itself without which he could not subsist!

Poppy Day Is Coming

Disabled men who bear the scars and hurts of war are today fashioning the buddy poppies which will be offered for sale to a generous public on May 24.

The public will make haste to buy them because the proceeds are to supplement the care of veterans and of the widows and orphans of veterans.

But Poppy Day should not be the only day of kindly concern. The needs are just as acute the other 364 days.

Do not let the responsibility of supplying them with comforts and delicacies be borne entirely by relatives and close friends and of furnishing them with entertainments by considerate professional actors, upon whom the demands are always heavy.

Also, when you see your Congressman hesitating or quibbling over some legislation that promises to be of value to the veterans, stick a pin in him.

The BAER Facts

By ARTHUR BAER

We're in the Glee Club.

House of Representatives voted to adopt Star Spangled Banner as our national noise.

Representative Linthicum sponsored the national anthem and will be musical instructor for the next administration.

The bill was stampeded three times by Collins of Mississippi, who didn't like Grand Opera, or suspected that the bill carried a rider annexing the Erie Canal.

The bill now goes to the Senate, which can either approve it or sing it.

You may not believe it, but last year Linthicum couldn't warble a note.

The Star Spangled Banner has been our big theme song for over a century. Key wrote it during a battle and it always sounds best that way.

Some gentle citizens object to the chirp because it is so manly. We don't know the words, but we are certainly a sensational hummer.

It breathes more defiance than a cat with starched whiskers. It doesn't ask for naval parity, raisins is our rice pudding or pensions for bridge dummies.

It's a battle invitation. When it swings that right hand the rest of the world is nothing but a big chin.

It tells of the havoc of war and the desolation of carnage. It invites strangers, foes and efficiency experts to step up and get knocked for a trial spin.

It ain't any mumble about the Lilies-of-the-Valley and little Blue Heavens.

In fact, it ain't really a song. It's a fever chart.

But we have been roaring it, with interpolations, for over a century.

And nobody has outsung us yet.

As an inciter to scrimmage it runs second to Dixie, the greatest battle lullaby of the ages. The Marseillaise is another splendid motif if you want to break a lease.

When those trombones and brasses start dishing up Dixie a thrill runs up your spine and knocks your hat off. Why not merge our two great marches and cook up a skirmish encore that would break all records for broadcasting without a station?

H. G. Wells Writes

ON "THE SCIENCE OF LIFE"

Man's brain and brain-case are proportionately larger; but, as Elliot Smith has shown us, this increase is due to the enlargement of parts of the brain already represented in the ape—the parts concerned primarily with the faculty of association—and no brain organs are to be found in man which are not also to be found in apes.

The dog-teeth of us men are smaller, and so are our big toes, but our thumbs are larger. We have adopted a fully upright position, and our whole anatomy shows minor changes as a result.

Our legs are straighter than apes'; our spinal cord is bent in a different way; our pelvis, besides still affording attachment to dozens of muscles, has been turned into a flat basin which supports the internal organs of our abdomen; a new development of the gluteal muscles is needed to hold us upright, with the result that our "lower back" protrudes in a way unknown among animal buttocks; our head is poised on a straight pillar of a neck, instead of protruding forward.

H. E. Wells

Our jaws and the bony ridges over our eyes are smaller, our noses and chins larger.

Apart from brain size, the reduced amount and length of hair on the human body and the less hand-like construction of the human foot are perhaps the most obvious differences between man and ape, but even they are only differences in proportions and amounts, no whole structures being gained or lost or transformed into something radically new.

Even when we come to behavior and the mind at the back of behavior the chimpanzee is far more like a man than like a frog.

To begin with, the actual raw material of an ape's experience the data provided by its senses differ from a frog's but resemble our own in many points.

The frog lives in a world of black and white; apes, like us, in one enriched with color. The apes, like us, have a "yellow spot" in their eyes, making them capable of exceptionally accurate vision; the power of discrimination in a frog's eye is much poorer and it pays no attention to any but moving objects.

The frog can hear, but its miserable little bag of a hearing organ compares very poorly with an ape's long coiled cochlea.

The range of sound which our ears permit us to hear and the delicacy with which we can discriminate between different tones are almost identical in ourselves and in apes; but the sound-world to which the frog has access is limited and crude in comparison.

In one respect, however, the frog has the advantage over us and over the apes. Its whole skin possesses organs of chemical sense, which in us are confined to the moist coverings of nose, eye, mouth and other mucuous membranes.

Thus it is able, albeit it would seem in a very crude way, to smell and taste or at least to be stimulated by various chemicals, all over its body. Finally, what emotions a frog possesses appear to be few in number and low in intensity—wholly unlike the extremely humap passions of apes.

But if the very bricks out of which it builds its mental life are different from ours, its ability to build with them is no less different.

The frog has powers of learning and association, but so feeble that we find it difficult to realize the extent of a frog's inability to profit by experience. Almost the whole of its actions are reflex, predetermined for it from the start by the inherited constitution of its nervous system.

The ape, like ourselves, has its due share of reflexes, and its complement of inborn instincts with their accompanying emotions; but like ourselves it can not only learn, but learn rapidly. Though its actions, like ours, are always built on foundations of reflexes and instincts, yet the great majority of them are what they are because of the animal's individual experience.

In a frog's life, learning by experience plays an insignificant part; it plays a preponderant part in a chimpanzee's.

Three-Minute Journeys

By TEMPLE MANNING

MANY things were changed by the war, it is true, but there are some things which cannot be changed, even by an event, an experience, as cataclysmic as a World War. One of them is human nature and we who like to travel over the world watching nature in its various aspects, should thank the benign providence which has ordained that human nature remain the same throughout generation after generation.

The Hungarians suffered during the war. They found themselves, at the armistice, facing new conditions and new emergencies. Their territory had been whittled away, there were new neighbors, new international complications. There was an almost new life to which they had to adjust themselves. But they had only to adjust—they did not have to change, they could not change their nature.

And so we come by a rather circuitous route to Budapest, one of Europe's most charming cities. Budapest on the Danube. Budapest, where the old Hungarian nature remains as it was before the war, as it has been for decades and generations.

Let us suppose that we have been visiting in Vienna. We have the choice of stepped aboard one of the boats which ply the waters of the Danube, the boat has cast off and we are sailing along—toward Budapest. It seems quite appropriate that there should float up to us from the boat's little orchestra, the strains of a Strauss waltz for is not his most famous the "Blue Danube."

Up and down the river passes a strange procession. There are boats of all sorts. Boats from strange ports in the Balkans.

And you sit there on the deck and dream.

Evening brings you to Budapest with its six bridges across the Danube, its strange combination of architecture, its undertone of the Orient, its mysticism and charm.

Originally, Budapest was two cities, Buda and Pest. One lies on one side of the Danube and the other is directly across the river. Buda was one time an old Roman colony, made famous by its natural sulphur baths. Pest was a flourishing German settlement until it was destroyed by the Mongols in the early part of the thirteenth century. It was not until 1872 that the two cities were joined and still another twenty years passed before it became the royal residence of

What Has Happened

THE GRAND INTERNATIONAL. SOME "ALSO RANS!"

The Illustrated London News, under able management, sees events clearly.

This picture shows you what it thinks about the recent Naval Conference in London, and especially about Uncle Sam's contribution to the Conference.

You see our distinguished lightweight jockey, Mr. Stimson, in the rear going the wrong way, and other American representatives.

You see Britain, represented by MacDonald, over the fence first, as is usual in British diplomacy, and old Papa Briand a close second.

The British gentleman who prepared this picture and wrote the "copy" to go with it calls the Stimson horse, "No Entanglement." And the Dwight Morrow horse "Maybe."

The following are extracts from the Britisher's comment, written in racegoer's lingo, as to the prospects of the race. Of Mr. Stimson's mount he writes:

"No Entanglement (Stimson)—Takes a bit of holding together, and his owner is fortunate in having been able to obtain the services of one of the strongest lightweights to ride him. He will probably prove something of a handful."

And Mr. Dwight Morrow's chances are described by the British writer as follows:

"Maybe (Dwight Morrow)—Is another who is not exactly a suitable mount for a boy. We understand however, that if the luck proves to be on his side on the present occasion he is very likely to win."

The British writer congratulating Uncle Sam on "having been able to obtain one of the strongest lightweights" is a good bit of British humor.

Mr. Duncan Curry, a thoughtful person, remarks truthfully that talk about "parity of sea power between this country and Britain is silly, the British having more than 9000 merchant ships, nearly all provided with gun-mountings, able to carry five, six or even ten-inch guns."

The talk about humanizing submarine warfare is most pitiful foolishness.

To demand that submarines come to the surface and make sure that crew and passengers are safe before sinking a ship is inviting the submarine to rise and be sunk.

If we had a war, as Mr. Curry points out, "the Aquitania, the Bremen or Ile de France could come here with ten-inch guns and two hundred or more airplanes on their decks to launch poison gas on American seaboard cities. And the United States' submarines could not sink them because they are called 'merchantmen.'"

New York Day by Day

By O. O. McINTYRE

New York, May 7—Eccentricity in New York is not altogether regarded as a touch of madness. Too many eccentrics have proved themselves geniuses merely seeking escape from the monotony of life. People look upon them with a certain awe instead of tapping foreheads surreptitiously.

The late Diamond Jim Brady waddling down the aisle decorated with jewels, like a glittering Cartier showcase, was at first responsible for smothered giggles. Then it became known that Mr. Brady was not only one of America's shrewdest salesmen, but an expert collector of art.

The incredible Harry Lehr with his monkey dinner, handcuffing himself to Mrs. O. H. P. Belmont and swallowing the key and other didoes was hailed as a dull-witted fop. Yet he became the animating spirit of society both here and abroad and an epigrammist of distinction.

Russell Sage, lunching on a frugal apple, and Hetty Green in her faded black cotton dress were supreme oddities, but became two of the wealthiest persons America has produced. Oscar Hammerstein, with his cone-shaped hat, was once regarded as Broadway's most courageous cuckoo.

Florenz Ziegfeld yastes $30,000 a year on rambling, long-winded telegrams, but has no peer in the musical comedy production field. Maud Adams, living in monastic seclusion, was one of the greatest stage stars. Henry L. Doherty, who spent most of his successful years in a Bridge attenement, is a noted magnate.

Overseas, Gabrielle D'Annunzio, Benjamin Disraeli, Oscar Wilde and George Bernard Shaw are branded as pronounced eccentrics of their respective times. Gerard de Nervhal brought Paris to the curbs while with an air of detachment he lead a deep sea turtle down the center of the boulevard.

The fact is most of us who indulge sly grimaces at these paradoxes secretly admire them. They provide a juicy bluster to humdrum lives. Without such gyrating swoops in a charted world the flow of humanity would become as tedious as a parade of ants.

Into a Madison ave. dressmaking salon. The fluttering proprietress tendered a gushing welcome and then gurgled ecstatically to someone in the rear: "O, Vera come smell Modom!"

In the heart of Broadway a vacant shop has been taken over by a quaint and luminous eyed fellow who proclaims with screaming banner: "The Bible Unmasked." Inside are tracts for sale. For a half hour I watched proceedings. A few idled before the window. But the majority glanced at the sign, indulged an involuntary shudder and hurried on. Not a person went inside.

New York's Greek section, without a shoe shine parlor incidentally, sprawls for blocks along Madison st. on the lower East Side. It is filled mostly with brilliantly lighted cafes—a sort of Grecian White Way—where patrons sit until late at marble topped tables sipping coffee which is fearfully strong and acts as a bland nepenthe.

Chrystie st. has many "matrimonial clubs." They are stores fitted up like pleasant living rooms where young folk meet and the proprietors promote beautiful romances for a small fee.

After sitting through two tiresome evenings at Madison Square Garden it seems to us that pugilists could just as well settle their differences by mail.

I still think the best line at a prize fight was pulled by a gallerylte at the old Garden. Two husky contestants were patting each other lightly when a voice bawled: "Turn out the lights. They want to be alone."

"New York" intones a visiting British writer "boasts of its gigantic skyscrapers yet they are built up over night like houses of cards. They are as durable as papier mache and could be pulled down with a good strong wrench."

Go ahead and pull one down. I'll hold the baby.
